OF THE ### ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Vol. 2.

LAB

L A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated, as, hlaf, loaf; hlafeg, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall, still, full;
except after a diphthong; as, fail, jail,
real, cool. In a word of more syllables it is written single; as, channel, canal, tendril. It is sometimes put before e, and sounded feebly after it; as, bible, title.

LA. interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unless it be the French la.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

LA'BANUM. n. f. A resin, of a strong not unpleasant smell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub in Crete. Hill.

TO LA'BEFY. v. a. [labefacio, Lat.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LA'BEL. n. f. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A small slip or scrap of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.
On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impress'd from the papal seal.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall stay them both. Shakspeare.

LA'BENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Dict.

LA'BIAL. adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

VOL. II.

LAB

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.
Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Holder.

LA'BIATED. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

LA'BIODENTAL. adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very easy; and first the labiodentals, f, v, also the linguodentals, t, d, th. Holder.

LABO'RANT. n. f. [laborans, Lat.] A chymist. Not in use.

I can show you a sort of first sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY. n. f. [laboratoire, French.]
A chymist's workroom.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chymists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the turnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABORIOUS. adj. [laboricus, French;
laboriosus, Lat.]

1. Intelligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unpotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and, lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South.

A spacious cave within its farthest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth confin'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace.
Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

Do it thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all: learn them from Cato. Add.

LABORIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.]
With labour; with toil.

The silly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Dec. of Piety.

I chide laboriously to hear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from laborious.]

1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gain's effects, as well as

LAB

the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LA'BOUR. n. f. [labour, Fr. labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome performance; pains; toil; travail;
work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakspeare.
I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thaj.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Shakspeare.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Horsey.

5. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
Incline thy will to assist our wishful vow. Spenser.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throes come thicker, and my cries excreas'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse sup-press'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour.
Greunt.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Sermon.

TO LA'BOUR. v. n. [laboro, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to the top of that same hill?
—You do climb up it now; look how we labour.
Shakspeare.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd.
More than mine own. Shakspeare.

Who is it with him?

—None but the fool, who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

Let some work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exed.

He is so touch'd with the memory of his pains

valence and protection, that his soul labour for an expression to represent it. Notes on the Odyssey.

Euphrates salute you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that we may stand perfect. Colley.

2. To do work; to take pains.

The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich. Pectus.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Nehemiah.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.

The stone that labours up the hill, Mocking the labourer's toil, returning full, Is love. Glanville.

4. To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Latin.] Not in use.

I was called to another, who in childhood laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. H. J. Man.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this internal lake the fury flies, Here hides her hated head, and fires the labouring flames. Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne, As sounding cymbals mid the labouring moon. Dryd.

Thus exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. W. H. Preparation for Death.

6. To be in childbirth; to be in travail.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth, When she was labouring in the throes of birth; For th' unborn child the fatal sisters came, And said it up, and told it on the flame. Dryd.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode, And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring god. Pope.

To LABOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment. 2 Maccabees.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand, Th' artificer and art you might command, To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Euclid.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasion'd mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information. Pope.

To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak, And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryd.

LABOUREUR. n. f. [laboureur, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-hicks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the labourer of the year, Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store, To swell those tides, which from the line did bear Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryd.

Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers dots. Arbutnot.

Not balmy sleep to labourers faint with pain, Not flow'rs to larks, or sun-shine to the bee, Are built so charming, as they fight to me. Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed, Health to himself, and to his infants bread, The labourer bears. Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

LAC

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakespeare.

The stone that labours up the hill, Mocking the labourer's toil, returning full, Is love. Glanville.

LABOURSOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not in use.

LA'DDER, n. f. [hlabe, Saxon.]

1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.

Whose compass is rotten, and carried in time,
And spread as it should be, thirt's ladder was

Now fleets grow through'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quene;

Some cut the pipe, and stane the engine's play,
And some more bold mount ladder to the tree

Easy in words thy style, in sense sublime,
'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream.

Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Prior.
I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it.

Any thing by which one climbs.

Then took the help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a hasty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief.

I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords.

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne; Shaksp.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shaksp.

3. A gradual rise.

Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach.

LADE, n. f.

Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon lade, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river.

To LADE, v. a. preter. laded; part. passive, laded or laden, [from hlaben, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burden.

And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence.

greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Broome on the Odyssey.

LANCE. n. f. [lance, Fr. lanca, Lat.]

A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback.
Spear; javelin.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lance-blow. Sidney.

LAN

Plate hit with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurls it breaks;
Aren't it rags, a pigny's straw doth pierce it.

They shall hold the bow and the lance, Jeremiah.
He clor belobd his jav'lin tall in vain;
Nor other lance, nor other hope remain;
He calls Druphobus, demands a spear
In vain, for no Druphobus was there. Pope.

To LANCE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To pierce; to cut.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lance'd my arm. Shaksp.

Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lance'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart, Drew backward. Dryden

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.

We do lance Diseases in our bodies. Shakspere
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle a cure
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the cure. Shak.
That differs as far from our usual inventions, as the lancings of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. Decay of Ficty.

Lance the fore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden.
The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle pray'rs, from heav'n demands.
Dryden

LA'NCIV. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lancey blow. Sidney.

LANCER'S ADR. n. f. [lance speziate, Fr.]
The officer under the corporal; not now in use among us.

To th' Indies of her arm he flies,
Fought both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancer's pike,
With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore.
Cleveland.

LA'NCET. n. f. [lancette, Fr.] A small pointed, chirurgial instrument.

I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wyseman's Surgery.
A vein, in an apparent blue, mineth along the body, and if dexterously pricked with a lancet, equoth a red drop. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Hippocrates faith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or fowls, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by flapping or pertusion, as in horses. Arbutnot.

To LANCHE, v. a. [lancer, Fr.] This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whole arm can lance the finer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee.
Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unable to tread that interdicted shore,
When Jove tremendous in the fable deeps,
Lanch'd his red lightning at our better'd ships.
Pope.

LAND. n. f. [lanb, Gothick, Saxon, and so all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. A country; a region distinct from other countries.

The nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-berd people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Duckingham. Shakspere.

LAN

What had he done to make him fly the land?

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotic. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Earth, distinct from water.
By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.

Yet if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possels
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less.
But, ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dryd.
They turn their leads to sea, their items to land,
And rest with greedy joy th' Indian strand. Dryd.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The pumers delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the seadu'plines diff' red from the land service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.
He to-night hath landed a land errack;
It it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shaksp.
With eleven thousand land-jobbers, and twenty-six days of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and lardy, and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale's Or of Mankind.
I want not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden's Feneid.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Arbutnot.
The Phœnicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stoop not short, without pulling their trade to the Indies. Arbutnot.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea.
Arbutnot.

Cattle, and goods whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection. Shakspere.
He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knolles.

His man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall;
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

Those answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divin'd, the land believ'd. Dryd.

7. Urine. [hlonb, Saxon.] As Probably land-damn was a coarse expression in the cant slang, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or laut is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hanmer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shaksp. Win. Tale.

To LAND, v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.

The lexions, now in Gallia, sooner landed In Britain. Shakspere's Cymbeline.
He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryden.

Another Typhis shall new seas explore, Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shaksp.

Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack,
Lank, as an unthrill's purle. Donne.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Most earth produces corn and grass, but both too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.

Let not my land be large a promise boast,
Lest the lank ears in length of time be lost. Dryden.

LAP

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreads the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on.
Till his lark purfue declare this money gone. Dryd.
Meagre and lank with fasting grows,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and last together. Swift

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He, pitious of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to maintain
In nuptial lovers throw'd with aliphond. Milton.

God shall be my hope.
My stay, my guide, my lanthorn in my feet. Shak.
Thou art my admiral; thou bearest the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art
the knight of the burning lamp. Shakespeare.
A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house, the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon's Atlantid.

O thou still night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the flaps
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil? Milton.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Gov. of the Tongue.
Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden marvellous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lanthorn-maker. Mor's Divine Dialogues.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the middle of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A light-house; a light hung-out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn shad on high Shines like a moon through the beamed sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addison.

LA'NTERN jaws. A term used of a thin village, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transfix the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn jaws,
he wrong his face into a hideous grimace. Speet.

up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift.

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.
It feeds each living plant with liquid lap,
And hills with flow'rs fair Flora's painted lap. Speet.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumbering
All in his mother's lap.
A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet morn'ning,
About him flew by hap. Speet.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'twixt sweet ladies with my words and looks,
She bids you
All on the wanton roses lay you down,

And lap your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will tug the tongue that pleases you.
Shakespeare.

Our fluting
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The never lost wearied Antony. Shakespeare.

Heaven's slanting fire
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours Himself into her lap in fruitful showers. Croft.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into rear,
Gudges their life from whence his own began:
Not black of laws, affects to rule alone,
Ambitious to reign, and restless on the throne. Dryd.

To LAP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

He hath a long talk which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himself from falling. Greco's Museum.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stuff like thin parchment, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flowing forest rath she fled,
In her rude haunts how low themselves did lap,
And dourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did en-wrap. Spenser.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thus and naked, to the numb cold night. Shak.

Ever against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton.

Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling, broods upon the naked boy,
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dry.

Here was the repository of all the wide conton-tions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Calugula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be spread or turned over
any thing.

The upper wings are opaque; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly. Greco.

To LAP. v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciproca-tions of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side bring thirsty,
lap hastily as they run along the shore. Dighe.

LA'PIDARY. n. f. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: Well (says he), this sparkling toolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't. Il'livore.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To LA'PIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To

by an ordinary lapidist. Ray.

LA'PIS. n. f. [Latin.] A stone.

LA'PIS Lazuli.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore,
very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, of an elegant blue colour, variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour, to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli. Hall.

LA'PPER. n. f. [from lap.]

1. One who wraps up.

They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor. Swift.

2. One who laps or licks.

LA'PPER. n. f. [diminutive of lap.] The part of a head dress that hangs loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to ex-other's lappers, and ruffles, and mantles? Swift.

LAPSE. n. f. [lappus, Lat.]

1. Flow; fall; glide; smooth course.

Round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And heard the tinkling of many ring streams. Milton.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time. Hale.

2. Petty error; small mistake; slight offence; little fault.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth. Brown.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disquiesces it, and it is easier to persuade than to let it from other's lapses than their own. Orlando's See-fa

A pardon to the captain, and a large
Among the soldiers, had appear'd their fury. Denn.
The paltry large too feverishly watch'd,
That no intruding guests usurp a share. Dryden.

LARGITION. n. f. [largitio, Latin.] The act of giving. Ditt.

LARK. n. f. [lapeuce, Saxon; lerk, Dan-nish; larrack, Scottish.] A small singing bird.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shaksp.
Look up a lark, the thrill-gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shaksp. King Lear.

The example of the heavenly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark. Cowley.
Mark how the lark and linnets sing;

With sweet notes
They strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

LARKER. n. f. [from lark.] A catcher of larks. Ditt.

LARKSPUR. n. f. [delphinium.] A plant.

LARVATED. adj. [larvatus, Lat.] Mulked.

LARUM. n. f. [from alarum or alarm.]

1. Alarm; noise noting danger.
His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When mute requir'd, but never out of tune. Spens.
The peaking comate, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the infant of our encounter. Shakspcare.

How far off he thence armies?
— Within a mile and half.
— Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.
Shakspcare.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours, as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and has a continual larum bell in his ears. Howe.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three in her bag, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that cut but two meals a day, as others, that have let their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five. Lecke.
The young Aeneas, all at once let down,
Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town. Pope.

LARYNGOTOMY. n. f. [λάρυγξ and τομή;
laryngotomy, French.] An operation where the forepart of the larynx is divided to assist respiration, during large tumours upon the upper parts; as in a quinsy. Quincy.

LARYNX. n. f. [λάρυγξ.] The upper part of the trachea, which lies below the root of the tongue, before the pharynx. Quin.

There are thirteen muscles for the motion of the five cartilages of the larynx. Derham.

LASCIVIENT. adj. [lascivius, Latin.]

Fricklebone; wantoning.

1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?
— Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shaksp.

He on Eve
Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him
As wantonly repaid, in kind they burnt. Milton.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unmanly difficulties which, over their cups, they have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deny his money, the lascivious man to throw off his leaden armour, and all their giant-like objections against Christianity shall presently vanish. South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim visag'd war hath smooch'd his wrinkl'd front;

And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakspcare.

LASCIVIOUSLY. adv. [from lascivious.]

Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

LASCIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from lascivious.]

Wantonness; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviusness of his Elegies, and his Art of Love. Dry.
LASH. n. f. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from sichlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence flask and lash.]

1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.
From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of flogging lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryd.
Rous'd by the lash of his own scabbard tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.

2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of crickets bone, her lash of film,
Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat. Shaksp.
I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it.
Addison.

3. A leash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare. Out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lash
With losses on every side. Tusser's Husbandry.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.
The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. LEStrange.

TO LASH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France.
Shakspcare.

He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.

And lumping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryd. Horace.

Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Leaning on his lance, he mounts his car,
His fiery couriers lashing through the air. Garth.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.
The club hung round his ears, and butter'd brows;
He falls; and lashing up his heels, his order throws.
Dryden.

3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.

the winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frightened shores. Prior.

4. To scourge with satire.

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain, Flat'ers and hugots e'en in Louis's reign. Pope.

5. To tie any thing down to the side or mast of a ship; properly to lace.

TO LASH. v. n. To ply the whip.

They lash aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at ev'ry stroke. Dryden.

Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryd. Peyf.

Let men out of their way lash on ever to fast, they are not so tall the nearer their journey's end. South.

Which class with wheels, and bar the narrow street;

The lashing whip resounds. Gay's Trivia.

LASHIER. n. f. [from lash.] One that whips or lashes.

LASS. n. f. [from lad is formed laddess, by contraction lafs. Hickes.] A girl; a maid;

a young woman: used now only of mean girls.

Now was the time for vig'rous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;

A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Wal.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. LEStrange.

They sometimes an hasty-kiss Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn, and neck reclu'd relent. Philips.

LASSITUDE. n. f. [lassitudo, Latin; lassitude, French.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition. Bacon.

Affiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glan.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. Moré's Anecdote against Atheism.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired. Watts.

From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran,
And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope's Odyssey.

2. [In physics.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distemp'ered state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest; it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice whereby the fibres are not supplied.
Quincy.

LASSLORN. n. f. [lafs and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Brown groves,
Whose shadow the dismisted batchelor loves,
Being lafs-lorn. Shakspcare.

LAST. adj. [lateste, Saxon; laetste, Dutch.]

1. Latest; that follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back? Sam.
O, may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire! Pope.

2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.

Merion pursued at greater distance still,
Last came Admetus, thy unhappy son. Pope.

3. Beyond which there is no more.

I will lay the last of them with the sword. Amos.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,

Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell. Cow.

The fawns, that on Cyther often toy'd

Their tuneful songs, now sing their last, and dy'd.
Addison.

O! may sun'd Brunswick be the last,
The last, the happiest but the king.

Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing. Addison.

But, while I take my last adieu,

Heave thou as high, nor shed a tear.

Here, last of nations, let your names be told. Pope.

Wit not alone has shone on ages past,

But lights the present, and shall warm the last.

4. Lowest; meanest. Pope.

Antiochus

Takes the last prize, and takes it with a jest. Pope.

5. Next before the present; as, last week.

6. Utmost.

Fools ambitiously contend

For wit and power; their last endeavours bend
To outtime each other. Dryden's Lascivius.

7. At LAST. In conclusion; at the end.

Gad, a troop shall overcome him; but he shall overcome at the last. Geays.

Thus weather-cocks, that for a while

Have turn'd about with ev'ry blast

Grown old, and destitute of oil,

Rust to a point, and fix at last. Friend.

8. The LAST; the end.

All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

LAST. adv.

1. The last time; the time next before the present.

How long is't now since last yourself and I

Were in a mask? Shakspcare.

When last I dy'd, and, dear! I die

As often as from these I go,

I can remember yet that I

Something did say, and something did bestow. Donne.

2. In conclusion.

Pleas'd with his idol, he commends, admires,
Adores; and last, the thing ador'd desires. Dryd.

To LAST. v. n. [laetan, Saxon.] To endure; to continue; to persevere.

All more lasting than beautiful. Sidney.

I thought it more agreeable to my affection to your grace, to prefix your name before the essays: for the Latin volume of them, being in the universal language, may last as long as books last. Bacon.

With several degrees of lasting, ideas are imprinted on the memory. Locke.

These are standing marks of facts delivered by those who were eye-witnesses to them, and which were contrived with great wisdom to last till time should be no more. Addison.

LAST. n. f. [laet, Saxon.]

1. The mould on which shoes are formed.

The cobbler is not to go beyond his last. L'Estr.

A colder produced several new grins, having been used to cast over his last. Spectator.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,

Each shoe would wrench the unwary step aside. Gay.

2. [last, German.] A load; a certain weight or measure.

LASTERY. n. f. A red colour.

The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did spread,
That her became as pinkish ivory,

Which cunning craftman's hand bath overlaid,
With fair vermilion, or pure lastery. Spenser.

LASTAGE. n. f. [lastage, Fr. lastagie, Dut.

last, Sax. a load.]

1. Custom paid for freightage.

2. The ballast of a ship.

LASTING. participial adj. [from last.]

1. Continuing; durable.

Every violence offered weakens and impairs, and renders the body less durable and lasting. Ray.

2. Of long continuance; perpetual.

White parents may have black children, as negroes sometimes have lasting white ones. Bayle on Colours.

The grateful work is done,

The seeds of discord sow'd, the war begun:

Frands, fears, and fury, have possess'd the state,

And fix'd the lasting seat of lasting hate. Dryd. Aeneid.

A new cracked feldom recovers its former strength, and the memory of it leaves a lasting caution in the mind, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.

LASTINGLY. adv. [from lasting.] Perpetually; durably.

LASTINGNESS. n. f. [from lasting.] Durableness; continuance.

All more lasting than beautiful, but that the consideration of the exceeding lastingness made the eye believe it was exceeding beautiful. Sidney.

Consider the lastingness of the motions excited in the bottom of the eye by light. Newton's Opticks.

1. In the last place.

I will justify the quarrel; secondly, balance the forces; and, lastly, propound variety of designs for choice, but not advise the choice. Bacon.

2. In the conclusion; at last; finally.

LATCH. n. f. [letse, Dutch; laccio, Italian.]

A catch of a door moved by a string, or a handle.

The latch mov'd up. Gay's Pastorals.

Then comes rosy health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never physics had bled the latch. Smart.

To LATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a latch.

He had strength to reach his father's house: the door was only latched; and, when he had the latch in his hand, he turned about his head to see his pursuer. Locke.

2. [lecher, French.] To lecher.

But hast thou yet latched the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice, as I did bid thee do? Shaksp.

LATCHES. n. f.

Latches or lackets, in a ship, are small lines like loops, fastened by twining into the bonnets and drablers of a ship, in order to lace the bonnets to the courses, or the drablers to the bonnets. Harris.

LA'POSET. n. f. [laet, French.] The string that fastens the shoe.

There cometh one mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose. Mark.

LATE. adj. [laet, Saxon; laet, Dutch; in the comparative latter or later, in the superlative latest or last. Last is absolute and definite, more than latest.]

1. Contrary to early; slow; tardy; long delayed.

My halting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud nor blossom sheweth. Milton.

Just was the vengeance, and to latest days Shall long posterity rebound thy praise. Pope.

2. Last in any place, office, or character.

All the difference between the late servants, and those who stand in the family, was, that those late were finer gentlemen. Spectator.

TO LAVE. v. a. [lavo, Latin.]

1. To wash; to bathe.

L A U

Unsafe, that we must love our honours
In these fast-flying streams. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
But as I poise out of the loving stream,
Heav'n open'd her eternal doors, from whence
The spirit descended on me like a dove. Milton.
With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Whose low-laid mouths each mounting billow laves,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryden.
2. [lever, Fr.] To throw up; to lade;
to draw out.

Though hills were set on hills,
And seas met seas to guard thee, I would through:
I'd plough up rocks, steep as the Alps, in dust,
And lace the Tyrrhene waters into clouds,
But I would reach thy head. Ben Jonson.
Some flow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,
Another bolder yet the yard bestrides,
And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
Th' intruding seas, and waves eject on waves. Dryden.

To LAVE, v. n. To wash himself; to bathe.
In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,
And with celestial tears augments the waves. Pope.
To LAVER, v. n. To change the direction often in a course.

How easy 'tis when destiny proves kind,
With full spread sails to run before the wind:
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lareering go,
Must be at once refus'd, and skilful too. Dryden.
LA'VENDER, n. f. [lavendula, Latin.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper lip, standing upright, is roundish, and, for the most part, broad; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorls, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Miller.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aroma-tick smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalick, nervous, and uterine medicine. Hill.

And then again he turneth to his play,
To spoil the pleasures of that paradise:
The wholesome sage, and lavender still grey,
Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes. Spenser.

LA'VER, n. f. [lavoir, French; from lave.]
A washing vessel.

Let us go find the body where it lies Soak'd in his enemies' blood, and from the stream
With lavers pure, and cleaning herbs, wash on The clouded gune. Milton's Agonistes.
He gave her to his daughters, to imbathie
In nectar'd lavers brew'd with aphrodis. Milton.
Young Arius from forth his bridal bow'r Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour. Pope's Ode.

To LAUGH, v. n. [lahan, Saxon; lachen, German and Dutch; lach, Scottish.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
There's one did laugh in's sleep, and gave cried Another! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

They wak'd each other. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
At this faulty stuff

The large Achilles, on his prest bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakspeare.

Laughing causeth a continued expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughing, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if it be violent. Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the world, in that I pray
You use her well; the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if You do it her. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd. Dryden.
The plenteous board, high-heap'd with catesdivine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.

L A V

3. To LAVON, st. To treat with contempt; to ridicule.

Presently prepare thy grave;
Lies where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone duly: make thine epitaph,
That death in thee at others lives may laugh. Shakspeare.

'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laughed at. Shakspeare.
The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find that they are merry at their own expence. Addison.

No wit to flatter left of all his store;
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.
To LAUGH, v. a. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
A wicked soul shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies. Ecclusiasticus.

LAUGH, n. f. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Ma gentle Della beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

LAUGHABLE, adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Shakspeare.
Catholon confesses Perius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer. Dryden.

LAUGHEN, n. f. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

I am a common laugher. Shakspeare.
Some sober men cannot be of the general opinion,
but the laughers are much the majority. Pope.

LAUGHINGLY, adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

LAUGHINGSTOCK, n. f. [laugh and stock.]
A butt; an object of ridicule!

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
The laughing-stock of fortune's mockery. Spenser.
Pray you, let us not be laughing-stocks to other men's humours. Shakspeare.

Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughing-stock at once. J. J. Strange.

LAUGHTER, n. f. [from laugh.] Convul-sive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in expectation; lives not in fear.
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Shakspeare.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves. Brown.

We find not that the laughter-loving dame Mourn'd for Anchises. Walter.
Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISI, adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology.
It may be plausibly derived from lave, to throw out; as profundere opes, is to be lavish.]

1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence. Dry.
The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And sed him till he loaths. Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse; as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.
Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, curbing his lavish spirit. Shakspeare.

L A U

To LA'VISH, v. a. [from the adjective.]
To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lend them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands?
Addison.

LA'VISH, n. f. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

LA'VISHLY, adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakspeare.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.
Pier'd to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives;
but if too lavishly, overcharges and deprecates him. Pope.

LA'VISHMENT, } n. f. [from lavish.]
LA'VISHNESS, } Prodigality; profusion.

First got with guile, and then prefer'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishness. F. Queen.

To LAUNCH, v. n. [It is derived by Skim- mer from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.
Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke.

So short a stay prevail;
He soon equips the ships, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.

For general history, Raleigh and Howell are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whew. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind. Dow.
Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with submissive imitation: he launches out into very flowery paths, which still conduct him into one great road. Prior.
He had not acted in the character of a suppliant,
if he had launched out into a long oration. Brown.
I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbutnot.

To LAUNCH, v. a.

1. To push to sea.
All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch
presbtery, in England. King Charles.
With flays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on leavers, launched her in the deep. Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better written lance or lance.

The king of Heaven, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His written bolt, not smoking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook. Dryden.

LAUND, n. f. [lande, French; laund, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Howell.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll laund ourselves;

For through this laund anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand. Shakspeare.

LA'UNDRESS, n. f. [lavandiere, French:]
Skinner imagines that lavandresse may have been the old word.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

The counters of Richmond would often say, On condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Candide.

Take up these cloths here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet Mead. Shakspeare.
The laundress must be sure to tear her stockings in the washing, and yet wash them but last. Swift.

LAUNDRY, n. f. [as if launderie.]

1. The room in which clothes are washed. The affairs of the family ought to be consulted, whether they concern the stable, dairy, the poultry, or laundry. Swift.

2. The act or state of washing.

Chalky water is too fretting, as appeareth in laundry of cloaths, which wear out apace. Bacon.

LAUFOLIA, n. f. [laufolle, French.] An old dance, in which was much turning and much capering. Hannmer.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lute; nor sweeten talk;
Nor play at subtle games. Shakespeare.

LAUREATE, adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.

And Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodills fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate hearth where Lycid lies. Milton.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Pope.
LAUREATION, n. f. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowery crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients.

LAUREL, n. f. [laurus, Lat. laurier, Fr.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.

The laurel or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree.

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors,
And poets sage. Fairy Queen.

The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree. Montmorency.

LAURELL, adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel; laureate.

Hear'st thou the news? my friend! the express is come.

With laurel'd letters from the camp to Rome. Dryden.

Then fame ages with delight shall live
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, books agree;
Or in fair scenes laurel'd bards be shown.

A Virgil there, and here an Addison. Pope.

LAW, n. f. [laga, Saxon; loi, French; laugh, Erse.]

1. A rule of action.

That which doth assign unto each thing the kind, that which doth moderate the force and power, that which doth appoint the form and measure of working; the same we term a law. Hooker.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleasing in his children's cause. Dryden.

2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publicly established as a rule of justice.

Ordain them laws, part such as appertain
To civil justice, part religious rites. Milton.

Our nation would not give laws to the Irish, therefore now the Irish gave laws to them.

Davies on Ireland.

3. A decree authoritatively annexing rewards or punishments to certain actions.

So many laws argue to many sins. Milton.

Laws politique among men pretending man to be rebellious. Hooker.

4. Judicial process.

When every case in law is right. Shakespeare.

He hath rebeld law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare.

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body: there is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions.

Spectator.

5. A distinct edict or rule.

One law is split into two. Baker on Learning.

6. Conformity to law; any thing lawful.

In rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

7. The rules or axioms of science: as, the laws of mechanics.

8. An established and constant mode or process; a fixed correspondence of cause and effect: as, the laws of magnetism.

Natural agents have their law. Hooker.

I dy'd, whilst in the womb he lay'd, Attending Nature's law. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

9. The Mosaic institution: distinguished from the gospel.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by these shadowy expiations. Milton.

10. The books in which the Jewish religion is delivered: distinguished from the prophets.

11. A particular form or mode of trying and judging: as, law martial, law mercantile: the ecclesiastical law whereby we are governed.

12. Jurisprudence; the study of law: as, a doctor of law.

LAWFUL, adj. [law and full.] Agreeable to law; conformable to law; allowed by law; legitimate; legal.

It is not lawful for thee to have her. Matthew.

Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father,
Than my daughters got 'twixen lawful sheets. Shak.

LAWFULLY, adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeably to law.

This bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour doth take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, restrain a man.

It may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it. Dryden.

LAWFULNESS, n. f. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.

It were an error to speak further, till I may see some found foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action. Bacon.

LAWGIVER, n. f. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.

Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation. Bacon.

A law may be very reasonable in itself, although one does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

LAWGIVING, adj. [law and giving.] Legislative.

Lawgiving heroes, fain'd for taming brutes,
And raising cities with their charming lutes. Waller.

LAWFESS, adj. [from law.]

1. Unrestrained by any law; not subject to law.

The necessity of war, which among human actions is the most lawless, hath some kind of affinity with the necessity of law.

The lawless tyrant, who denies
To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compell'd. Milton.

Orpheus did not, as poets feign, time savage, beasts,

But men as lawless, and as wild as they. Roscom.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove, will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in open air. Dryden.

Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
They own'd a lawless savage liberty,
Like that our painted ancestors so priz'd,
Ere empire's arts their beasts had civiliz'd. Dryden.

He meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd. Pope.

2. Contrary to law; illegal.

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
He needs no indirect or lawless course
To cut off those that have offended him. Shakespeare.

We cite our faults,
That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives. Shakespeare.

Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
Thou of my blood who bear'st the Indian name. Dryden.

LA'WLESSLY, adv. [from lawless.] In a manner contrary to law.

Fear not, he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly. Shakespeare.

LA'WMAKER, n. f. [law and maker.] Legislator; one who makes laws; a law giver.

Their judgment is, that the church of Christ should admit no lawmakers but the evangelists. Hooker.

LAWN, n. f. [land, Danish; lawn, Welsh; lande, French.]

1. An open space between woods.

Between them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd. Milton.

His mountains were shaded with young trees,
That gradually shot up into groves, woods, and forests, intermix'd with walks, and lawns, and gardens. Addison.

Stern beasts in trains that by his truncheon fell,
Now grilly forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell. Pope.

Interpos'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that form each other's shades. Pope.

2. [linon, Fr.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.

Should'st thou bleed,
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair. Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A faint in crape is twice a faint in lawn. Pope.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire;
The duties by the lawn rob'd prelate paid,
And the last words, that dull to dull convey'd! Tickell.

LA'WSUIT, n. f. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the price a right to the title would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide. Swift.

LA'WYER, n. f. [from law.] Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It like the breath of an unfeeling lawyer, you gave me nothing for it. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office twine from it? Whitgate.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and received discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers. Bacon's Holy War.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's counsel rose;
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact. Swift.

LAX, adj. [laxus, Latin.]

1. Loose; not confined.

Inhabit lax, ye powers of heav'n! Milton.

2. Diffused; not strongly combined.

In mines, those parts of the earth which abound with trunks of stone, suffer much more than those which consist of gravel, and the like laxer matter, which more easily give way. Woodward.

3. Vague; not rigidly exact.

Dialogues were only lax and moral discourses. Baker.

Upon this they lay a layer of stone, and upon that a lay of wood.

2. A wager.

It is esteemed an even lay, whether any man lives ten years longer: I suppose it is the same, that one of any ten might die within one year.

LAY, n. s. [ley, leag, Saxon; ley, Scottish.]

Graffy ground; meadow; ground unplowed, and kept for cattle; more frequently, and more properly, written lea.

A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay

They saw.

The plowing of layes is the first plowing up of grass ground for corn.

LAY, n. s. [lay, French. It is said originally to signify sorrow or complaint, and then to have been transferred to poems written to express sorrow. It is derived by the French from leffus, Latin, a funeral song; but it is found likewise in the Teutonic dialect: ley, leot, Saxon; leey, Danish.]

A song; a poem. It is scarcely used but in poetry.

To the maiden's founding timbrels sung, In well-tuned notes, a joyous lay.

The whiles with a loud lay, she thus him sweetly charm'd.

This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charming lays.

Nor then the solemn nightingale Ceas'd warbling, but all night tun'd her soft lays.

If Jove's will Have link'd that amorous power to thy soft lay,

Now timely sing. He reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lay,

Whom all his charms could not incline to stay. When Ceres let him call, and Ceres praise

With uncouth dances, and with country lays.

Ev'n gods incline their ravish'd ears, And tune their own harmonious spheres

To his immortal lays.

LAY, adj. [laicus, Latin; laic.] Not clerical; regarding or belonging to the people as distinct from the clergy.

All this they had by law, and some repin'd, The pretences was but due to lay's kind:

But when from lay pretence fell by chance,

The Command made it their inheritance. Lay, serious, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be chancellors, auditors, &c.

It might well stand

Our lay unlearned faith.

LAY, n. s. [from lay.]

1. A stratum, or row; a bed; one body spread over another.

A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the fibres.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a fluid in great quantity, will naturally be.

2. A sprig of a plant.

Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by lifting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and, after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply, well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a shank or two; and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week.

3. A hen that lay eggs.

The oldest are always reckoned the best layers, and the youngest the best layers.

LAYMAN, n. s. [lay and man.]

1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.

Laymen will neither admonish one another themselves, nor suffer ministers to do it.

Since a trust must be the thought it best To put it out of laymen's power at least.

And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part wages for his lands, his title as tenant, and as legal, or that of a layman, who is seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains?

2. An image used by painters in contriving attitudes.

You are to have a layman almost as big to the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you.

LAYSTALL, n. s. A heap of dung.

Scarce would he footing find in that foul way, For many corpses, like a great lay-stall

Of murdered men, which therein strow'd lay.

LAYZER, n. s. [from lazarus, in the gospel.]

One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestilential diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case, Like loathsome lazars, by the hedge lay.

I'll be sworn, and sworn upon't, the never shrouded any but lazars.

I am weary with drawing the deformations of life, and lazars of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me.

Life be labours to refine Dull, nor of his little flock denies Fit aims to lazars merciful and meek.

LAYZER-HOUSE. } n. s. [lazarus, Fr. laz-

LAYZER-TTO. } zaretto, Italian; from Numbers of all diseases.

LAYZERWORT, n. s. [lasterpitium.] A plant.

LAYLY, adv. [from lay.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

Watch him at play, when following his own inclinations; and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke.

The eastern nations view the rising fires, While night shades us, and lazily retires. Creech.
L'AZINESS. n. f. [from lazy.] Idleness; sluggishness; listlessness; heaviness in action; tardiness.

That influence of fraud and laziness, the unjust reward; who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve. South.

My fortune you have refused, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness. Dryden.

L'AZING. adj. [from lazy.] Sluggish; idle. The hands and the feet continued against the belly; they knew no reason, why the one should be laziness, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour. L'Estrange.

The fox cried, Ultimam hoc effat laborare, while he lay laziness and lolling upon his couch. South.

L'AZUL. n. f. The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white, and a glittering or metallic yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow talc; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this shines off in the calcination of the stone, and emits a sulphurous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver. Woodward.

L'AZY. adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from a l'aise, French; but it is however Teutonic; laiser in Danish, and lofigh in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Nithardus, in tres ordines; Edhilingos, Frilingos & Lazzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenios & serviles: quam & nos distinctionem dia retinimus. Sed Ricardus antem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; se ut hodie apud Anglos rariores invenitur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus antiquæ appellationis commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazie dicimus.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work. Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy sight, Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail, Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakespeare.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and spend victuals. Bacon.

Whole lazy waters without motion lay. Roscom. The lazy glutton safe at home will keep, Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sleep. Dryd.

Like Eastern kings a lazy state they keep, And close confin'd in their own palace sleep. Pope.

Such court guile, As Mercury did first devise, With the mencing Dryades, On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton.

The lowing herds wind slowly o'er the lea. Gray.

LEAD. n. f. [lab, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11,322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoria, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare.

Of lead, some I can show you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common cerusa with vinegar; of cerusa, red lead; of plumbum nitrum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; because houses are covered with lead.

Stalls, bulks, windows, Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd With variable complexions; all agreeing In earnestness to see him. Shakespeare.

I would have the tower two stories, and gnomes leads upon the top, raised with statues interposed. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the furnace. Ecclesiasticus.

There is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass leaded with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. preter. I led; part. led. [laban, Saxon; leiden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head Looks fearfully on the confined deep: Bring me but to the very brim of it, And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear, With something rich about me: from that place I shall no leading need. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Dost not each on the filthiest loafe his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? Luke.

They thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill. Luke.

2. To conduct to any place. Save to every man his wife and children, that they may lead them away, and depart. 1 Samuel.

Lay't thou the leaden mace upon my boy,
That plays thee musick? Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.

A leaden bullet shot from one of these guns against a stone wall, the space of twenty-four paces from it, will be beaten into a thin plate. Wilkins.

2. Heavy; unwilling; motionless.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou too. Shakspere's Richard III.

3. Heavy; dull.

I'll strive with troubled thoughts to take a nap;
Left leaden slumber poise me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shaksp.

LEADER, n. f. [from lead.]

1. One that leads, or conducts.

2. Captain; commander.

In my tent
I'll show the form and model of our battle,
Lunit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength.

I have given him for a leader and commander to the people. Shakspere.

Those escap'd by flight, not without a sharp jest against their leaders, affirming, that, as they had followed them into the field, so it was good reason they should follow them out. Hayward.

When our Lycians see
Our brave examples, they admiring say,
Behold our gallant leaders. Denham.

The brave leader of the Lycian crew. Dryden.

passions, upon great numbers of leading men and parties. Swift.

LEADING-STRINGS, n. f. [lead and string.]

Strings by which children, when they learn to walk, are held from falling.

Sound in yonder flock, ere they to fate are grown,
Like leading-strings, till they can walk alone.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or from without bladders, without being discovered by his hobbling, and his sinking? Swift.

LEADMAN, n. f. [lead and man.] One who begins or leads a dance.

Such a light and muffled dance Saw you never,

And by leadmen for the nonce,
That in a round like gristle stones. Ben Jonson.

LEADWORT, n. f. [plumbago.] A plant.

LEAF, n. f. leaves, plural. [leaf, Saxon;
leaf, Dutch.]

1. The green deciduous parts of plants and flowers.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms.

A man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which his mission is made, if his graft have blossom buds; whereas if it were only leaf buds, it will not bear fruit till the second season. Boyle.

Those things which are removed to a distant view, ought to make but one mass; as the leaves on the trees, and the billows in the sea. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

2. A part of a book, containing two pages.

Many ye leaves, when as those holy hands Shall handle you. Spenser.

confederacy; a combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassage
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.

And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n.
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Sh.

We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shak.

Thou shalt be in league with the flocks of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me. 2 Chronicles.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in parts or leagues; there are other bands of society and implicit confederations.

1, a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bound, presum'd Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton.

Oh Tyrrians, with immortal hate Pursue this hated race; and let there be Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

To LEAGUE, v. n. To unite on certain terms; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade for aye, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to lessen their dependences. South.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the league of the adventures, when we bring him to our own tents. Shakspere.

LEAK, n. f. [lack, like, Dutch.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no artful man can cure, breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop. Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship. Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overet with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryd.

To LEAK, v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney. Shakspere.

anus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a sceptre in her hand, before an altar. Peucham on Drawing.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto so good supporters.

Upon his iv'ry sceptre first he leans,
Then shook his head, that shook the firmament. Dryden.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'erpent,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leans. Dryd.

If God be angry, all our other dependences will profit us nothing; every other support will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most. Bacon.

Then leaning o'er the rails he mus'd upon
'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around Leans the huge elephant. Thomson.

2. To propend; to tend toward.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient. Spenser.

Tru't in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. Proverbs.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judg-

Lean raw-bon'd rascals who would eat'st suppers,
They had such courage and audacity! Shakespeare.
Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change. Shakespeare.

I would invent as bitter Goettingh terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her leathern cave. Shaks.
Seven other kings came up out of the river, ill-favoured and iron-fetched. Geoff.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation. Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the cynic tub,
Praising the lean, and fallow, abstinence. Milton.
Swear that Adversus, and the lean-look'd prophet,
Are joint conspirators. Dryden and Lee.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the vessels. Arbuthnot.
The laughing graces wait on in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking fallow care,
Dwell on my brow. Rome's Jane Shore.

2. Not uncuous; thin; hungry.

There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water. Barnet.

3. Low; poor; in opposition to great or rich.

That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A lower action rend us. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

4. Jeane; not comprehensive; not embellished; me, a lean dissertation.

Through ribs of fat, and deluges of lean. Farquhar.

LEANLY. adv. [from lean.] Meagerly; without plumpness.

LEANNESS. n. f. [from lean.]

1. Extenuation of body; want of flesh; meagerness.

If thy leanness loves such food,
There are those, that, for thy sake,
Do enough. Ben Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid discharges, leanness, and weakness. Arbuthnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.

The poor king Reigner, whose large style Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Shaks.

TO LEAP. v. n. [hlean, Saxon; loup, Scottish.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry v.

A moon leapt better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon's Natural History.

In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowden.

Thence from the ground the leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To rush with vehemence.

God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a fear leaped from his throne, and took her to his arms, till she came to herself again. Æther.

After he went into the west, and found his net,
he leaped out to the people. Shaks.

He ruin upon ruin leaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Bentley.
Strait leaping from his horse, he rais'd me up. Rowe.

3. To bound; to spring.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. Luke.
I am warm'd, my heart Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. To fly; to start.

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shaks. Henry VIII.

Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job.

TO LEAP. v. n.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.

Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

She dares pursue if they dare lead:
As their example fill prevails,
She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beads.

Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden's Georg.

LEAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.

After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded? L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.

Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.

The commons wrestled even the power of chusing
a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was to great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.

The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.

How the clients her bellowing lover's eye;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.

It thinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon. Shakespeare.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where you old nicher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryden.

LEAP-FROG. n. f. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry v.

LEAP-YEAR. n. f.

A leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28.

To find the leap-year you have this rule:
I divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for part 1, 2, 3. Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bis-sextile or leap-year. Brown.

TO LEARN. v. a. [leornian, Saxon.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.
Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Matthew.

He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.

Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of human kind. Dryden.

You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Phillips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]
This sense is now obsolete.

He would learn
The lion sloop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid you.
For learning me your language. Shaks. Temp.

A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. She.
Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO LEARN. v. n. To take pattern: with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly. Matthew.

In imitation of sounds, that Men should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Natural History.

LEARNED. adj. [from learn.]

1. Veried in science and literature.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothing, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing; with in.

Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,

Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts. Gran.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apoklie seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad. Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitted in him, or forgotten. Shaks.

Every coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNING. n. f. [from learn.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences;
generally scholastick knowledge.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile;
then its strength of years, when solid, and,
lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.

As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.

An art of contradiction by way of scorn, & learning wherewith we were long thence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LEARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practise artist can. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

LEASE. n. f. [laizer, French. Spekman.]
1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, couldst, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shaksp.
Lords of the world have but for life their lease.
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Den.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops's leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspere.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short need hast thy own life's lease. Milton.
To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Auliff's Purgeon.
To LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dutch.] To glean;
to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chafe work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.

LEASER. n. f. [from lease.] Gleaner;
gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of *lease*s and gleaners. Swift.

LEASII. n. f. [lisse, French; letse, Dutch;
laccio, Italian.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspere.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following My leash unwillingly. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shaksp.
Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labours of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.

Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis's Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being thrown such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. B. p.
To LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, lie hand off,
Assume the part of Mars; and, at his heels,
To leash in like hounds, should tame, fear and fly,
Crouch for employment. Shakspere's Henry v.

LEASING. n. f. [leaze, Saxon.] Lies; falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and reckon'ting? Isaiah.

He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Hubb.

He hates foul leasings and vain flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentry. Hubbard's Tale.

That false pilgrim which that leashing told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Fairy Queen.

I have ever verked my friends
With all the fire that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bow upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leashing. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leashing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once affected,
Nor care to have their lie deserted:

Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.

*Trading men shall strive again,
Not to leave lewd afflict the wain.* Gay.

LEASE. n. f. the superlative of little. [laize, Saxon.] This word Wallis would persuade us to write least, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others;
finalled.

I am not wor hy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy sergent. Cicero.

A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to wave his suit.
Or for a while play least in fight. Hudibras.

Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
But taste it as the least unhappy lot. Dryden.

No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it. Pope.

At LEAST. } To say no more; not to
At the LEAST. } demand or affirm more
At LEASTWISE. } than is barely sufficient; } at the lowest degree.

He who tempts, though in vain, at least aspires
The tempted with dishonour. Milton.

He from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bellowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton.

Upon the wall they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat as on horseback. Sidney.

Every effect doth after a sort contain, at leastwise resemble, the cause from which it proceedeth. Hobbes.

Honour and fame at least the thund'ring ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a God. Pope.

The remedies, if any, are to be propos'd from a constant course of the milk diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the Omnipotent Being. Dryden.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created. Milton.

Let useful observation be at least some part of the subject of your conversation. Watts.

LEASY. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left
In use and leasy. Afham's Schoolmaster.

LEATHER. n. f. [lezer, Saxon; leadr, Erse.]

1. Dressed hides of animals.

leather about his loins. 2 Kings.

And if two boots keep out the weather,
What need you have two hides of leather? Prior.

2. Skin; ironically.
Returning found in limb and wind,
Except some leather lost behind. Swift.

3. It is often used in composition for leathern.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle;
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies. Shakspere.

LEATHERCOAT. n. f. [leather and coat.]
An apple with a tough rind.

There is a dish of leathercoats for you. Shaksp.

LEATHERDRESSER. n. f. [leather and dresser.] He who prepares leather; he who manufactures hides for use.

He removed to China; and by the way was entertained at the house of one Telesphorus, a leather dresser.

LEATHER-MOUTHED. adj. [leather and mouth.]

By a leather-mouth'd fellow, I meant such as have their teeth in their throat; as, the chub or cheven.
Wotton's Angler.

LEATHERY. adj. [from leather.] Made of leather.

I saw her hand; she has a leathery hand,
A free-stone colour'd hand: I verily did think
That her old fingers were un- Shakspere.

The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathery coat
Almost to bursting. Shakspere's As you like it.

In sicken or in leathery pulse retain
A sploudid shilling. Philips.

LEATHERSELLER. n. f. [leather and seller.] He who deals in leather, and vends it.

LEATHERY. adj. [from leather.] Resembling leather.

Wormius calls this craft a leathery his. Orren.

LEAVE. n. f. [lepe, Saxon; from lypan, to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.
By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful foresight, methinks I see an evil luck unspied. Spenser.

When him his dearest Una did behold,
Ditching life, desiring leave to dye. Spenser.
I make bold to press upon you.
—You're welcome; give us leave, drawer. Shaksp.

Of Sylla's sway, when the sword took leave
To act all that it would. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Thrice happy thanks! that in her love
May boldly creep; we dare not give Our thoughts to unconfin'd leave. Water.

No friend has leave to bear away the death Dray.
Offended that we fought without his leave.
He takes this time his secret hate to show. Dryden.

One thing more I crave leave to offer about gyl- logium, before I leave it. Leah.

I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party; nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of saying this leave. Pope.

2. Farewel; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith.
Shakspere.

Evils that take leave,
On their departure, must of all shew evil. Shaksp.

There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him. Shakspere's King Lear.

I dare my father comes;
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave. Shakspere.

But, my dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Swickling.

Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations. Brown.

To LEAVE. v. a. pret. I left; I have left.
[Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account.]

1. To quit; to forsake.
A man shall leave his father and his mother,
and cleave unto his wife. Genesis.

If they love less, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the wine. Ben Jon.

2. To desert; to abandon.
He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him. Psalmist.

3. To depart from, without action: as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great distress. Chronicles.

4. To have remaining at death.
There be of them that have left a name behind them. Ecclasiasticus.

They shall have left me the providence of God.

LEA

and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too. Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind comprehendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed. Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages. Abbot.

Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves out of the room of any one to discover from his writings. Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for them. Judges.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattle; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil. Deut.
Valius gave strict commendment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage. Knutles' History.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life, I am superiour, I can take or leave. Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my rowder, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, O! happy shade! be ever thine. Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger. Leviticus.
If a wife man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a villain, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, tell my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Samuel.

14. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.

In proportion as old age come on, he left off fire-burning. Spectator.

15. To LEAVE off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the taverns; he put on a serious air. Irrubant.

16. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
You may mistake. I have told 'em who you are. -- I should be loth to be left out, and here too. B. Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.

Befriend till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere vice worn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop hole peep. Milton.

We ask, if those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive Though we one atom out of matter leave? Blackm.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Iucca and Varus, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison.

To LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shaksp.
And cease this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shaksp.
He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genius.

2. To LEAVE off. To desist.

Grimes, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, where-with he perceived he little prevailed. Knutles.

LEC

But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait. Rejcom.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.
To LEAVE. v. a. [from levy; lever, French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.

An army strong the leave'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

LEAVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the lions of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Josiah.

LEAVEN. n. f. [levain, Fr. levare, Lat.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light: particularly used of four dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baked with leaven. Leviticus.
All fermented meats and drinks are earliest digested; and those unfermented, by barn or leaven, are hardly digested. Flower.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass: it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions favour very strongly of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

To LEAVEN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

You must bury the leav'n'ing. Shaksp.
Whoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exodus.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon.

2. To taint; to imbue.

That cruel something unpossess'd, Corrodes, and leaves all the rest. Prior.

LEAVER. n. f. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A weather-leaver, and a fugitive. Shakespeare.

LEAVES. n. f. The plural of leaf.

Paris fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon's Natural History.

LEAVINGS. n. f. [from leave.] Remnant;

relics; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd to gether,
To this poor hall, his little Roman tenants,
The tearings of Pharisæ. Addison's Cato.

The men who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Chloe's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed? Swift.

LEAVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves: leafy is more used.

Strephon, with leafy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitfontide to bear. Sidney.

Now, near enough: your leafy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare.

To LECH. v. a. [lecher, Fr.] To lick over.

Hummer.

Hast thou yet leched the Athenian's eye
With the love juice? Shakespeare.

LECHER. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French: luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whoremaster.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house;
He cannot scape me. Shakespeare.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out young inheritors. Shaksp.

The lecher soon transforms his miltrois; now
In his place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his chattering chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

LED

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope.

To LECHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? no. The wren goes to't, and the snail gildeth fly does lecher in my sight. Shaksp.
Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night. B. Jonson.

LECHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Lewd; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

LECHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LECHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from lecherous.] Lewdness.

LECHERY. n. f. [from lecher.] Lewdness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ajcham.
Against such lewdness, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shaksp.

LECTION. n. f. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.

Every critic has his own hypothesis; if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts' Logic.

LECTURE. n. f. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidon.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

When in musick we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shaksp.
When letters from Caesar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Taylor's Holy Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and listen there. Locke.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantick discourse.

Numbata will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison.

To LECTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.

2. To instruct intolently and dogmatically.

To LECTURE. v. n. To read in public; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse: as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LECTURER. n. f. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.

2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

It may minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LECTURESHP. n. f. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached continually in person. Swift.

LED. The part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezekiel.

The leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Enoch.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not promulgated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDOE. n. f. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Watson.

2. A ridge rising above the rest, or projecting beyond the rest.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.

3. Any prominence, or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his feet he hides, The beading brow above a fate retreat provides. Dryden.

LEDHORSE. n. f. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEE. n. f. [lie, French.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse: commonly lees.

My cloaths, my sex, exchange'd for thee, I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.

2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from l'eau, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on.

To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not sail'd by a wind, to make her way so good as the might.

To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way.

If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Raleigh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north-west, making a lee shore in all weathers. Raleigh.

Unprovided of tackling and victuals, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. A. Charles.

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam, To pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff, Deeming some island, others women tell, With fixed anchor in his scaly rind, Moors by his side under the lee, while night Invests the sea. Milton.

Butter'd by his lee they lay, The passing winds through their torn canvases play. Dryden.

LEYCH. n. f. [lee, Saxon.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use couleech.

A leech, the which had great insight In that disease of grievous conscience, And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser's Faery Que.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech His cunning hand 'gan his wounds to lay, And all things else the which his art did teach. Fairy Queen.

Phylick is their haire, The learned leeches in despair depart, And shake their heads, depending of their art. Dryden.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude: Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill, Till some safe crisis. Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd, Tried every health-reforming herb and gum, And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Rowe.

A faithful leech, They say, had wrought this blessed deed; This leech Arbuthnot was yeapt. Guy's Pastors.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wifon.

Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood, Without remorse insatiably. Reynolds.

TO LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medicaments.

LEECRAFT. n. f. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others we persuade: We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it. Darles.

LEEF. adj. [lieve, lere, Dutch.] Kind; fond.

Whilome all these were low and leef, And lov'd their flocks to feed; They never strove to be the chief, And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastors.

LEEK. n. f. [leac, Saxon; look, Dutch; leechk, Erse; porrum, Latin.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fluellen?—Yes. —Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate, Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Guy.

We use acid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horseradish, garlick, or leek potage. Flour on Humours.

LEER. n. f. [hleape, Saxon.]

1. An oblique view.

I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Aside the devil turn'd For envy, yet with jealous leer malign Ey'd their advance. Milton.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.

Damn with lust praise, concede with civil leer. Pope.

I place a statesman full before my sight; A bloated monster in all his gear, With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

TO LEER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shaksp.

I wonder whether you take the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

2. To look with a forced countenance.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts, To gild a face with smiles, and let a man to ruin. Dryden.

LEES. n. f. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.

The memory of king Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon's Henry VII.

If they love lees, and leave the lilly wine, Fancy them on their palates with the wine. B. Jon.

The regaled fond of generous wine. Dryden.

TO LEISE. v. a. [lefen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.

Then tell to thy profit both butter and cheese, Who hureth it to see the more he shall leese. Tusser.

No cake, nor chum fat, will Cheviot leese; But as the yemas on both sides he takes keese; And pletheth both; for while he melts his grease For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. B. Jonson.

Box in the port our fleet dear time did leese, Wallowing like prisoners, which he but for leese. Donne.

LEET. n. f.

Leet, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon leðe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirthing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, he now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court.

The clippers were called long ships, the ocean round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the storage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind. Argensol.

Let us statesman dare, A kingdom to a ship compare; Left he should call our commonwealth A vessel with a double keel; Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd And got about a league from land, By change of wind to leeward side, The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEET. The participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left; I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shaksp.

Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at frustrating their diverting, but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Spec.

LEIT. adj. [luste, Dutch; latus, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.

That there is also in men a natural propensity in the right, we cannot with consistency affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The gods of greater nations dwell around, And, on the right and left, the palace bound; The commons where they can. Dryden.

The limbs are used most on the right side, whereby custom helps; for we see that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left hand most.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver in the left side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Although a quaint left-handedness B' ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne.

LEG. n. f. [leg, Danish; leggur, Icelandic.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They hallo; and what their tardy feet deny'd, The trusty staff, then better leg supply'd. Dryden.

Punging counts, and ants eyes, Had almost brought him off his legs. Budibree.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison.

2. An act of obsequence; a bow with the leg drawn back.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shakespeare.

Their horses never give a blow, But when they make a leg, and bow. Addison.

If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Swift.

3. To stand on his own legs; To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Cotter.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LEGACY, n. f. [legatum, Latin.]

A legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Cowel.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleads that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine how to cut off some charge in legacies. Shaksp.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. E. Strange.

When he thought you gone
T'augment the number of the bliss'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd his brother's portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.
Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LEGAL, adj. [legal, Fr. leges, Lat.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.
Whatsoever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.
2. Lawful; not contrary to law.
3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits
To save them, not their own, though legal, works. Milton.

LEGALITY, n. f. [legalité, Fr.] Lawfulness.

TO LEGALIZE, v. a. [legaliser, Fr. from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.
If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person; but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of Heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South.

LEGALLY, adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Taylor.

LEGATARY, n. f. [legataire, Fr. from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, creditors and legatees are, unto the ordinary. Ayliffe.

LEGATE, n. f. [legatus, Lat. legat, Fr. legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassador.
The legates from th' Arabian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost,
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heav'n. Shak.
Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him. Atterbury.

LEGATE'S, n. f. [from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legates are blotted out. Dryden's Jun.
My will is, that if any of the above-named legates should die before us, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself. Swift.

LEGATINE, adj. [from legato.]

1. Made by a legate.

When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution; that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a premunire. Shakspere.

LEGATION, n. f. [legatio, Lat.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

In attiring, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion costly, as in his legations. Wotton.

LEGATOR, n. f. [from lego, Lat.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debate
Betwixt pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequest'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden.

LEGEND, n. f. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nells which bred them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a frether date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison.

2. Any memorial or relation.
And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.

Who can show the legends, that record
More idle tales, or tables so absurd? Blackmore.

It is the way of attaining to Heaven, that makes profane scorners willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Medals.

LEGER, n. f. [from legger, Dutch. To lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador, a resident, one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the counting-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to Heav'n, Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shaksp.

I've giv'n him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leigers for her sweet. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

If leger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant. Bacon.

Who can endure
Thy praise too much? thou art Heav'n's leiger here, Working against the fates of death and hell. Herb.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leiger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon.

I call that a leger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.

LEGERDEMAIN, n. f. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, Fr.] Slight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.

Ho so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again. Hubbard.

Of all the tricks and legerdmain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South.

LEGERITY, n. f. [legereté, Fr.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. Not in use.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs though dumb and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakspere.

LEGGED, adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs.

LEGIBLE, n. f. [legibilis, Latin.]

1. Such as may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.

2. Apparent; discoverable.

People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face. Cotter.

LEGIBLY, adv. [from legible.] In such a manner as may be read.

LEGION, n. f. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shak.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY, adj. [from legion.]

1. Relating to a legion.
2. Containing a legion.
3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown.

LEGISLATION, n. f. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton.

LEGISLATIVE, adj. [from legislator.]

Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.

The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LEGISLATOR, n. f. [legislator, Latin;

legislateur, French.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.

Heroes in animated marble strown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLATURE, n. f. [from legislator, Latin.] The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made. Hale.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power; but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift.

LEGITIMACY, n. f. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.

In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.

The legitimacy of reality of their marine bottom vindicated. I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward.

LEGITIMATE. adj. [from legitimus, Lat. legitime, French.] Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land; Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shaksp.

An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion. Taylor.

TO LEGITIMATE. v. a. [legitimer, French; from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.

Legitimate him that was a bastard. Aylife.

2. To make lawful.

It would be impossible for any enterprise to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Deacy of Plety.

LEGITIMATELY. adv. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfully.

2. Genuinely.

By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat; Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

LEGITIMATION. n. s. [legitimation, Fr. from legitimate.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaim'd my land; Legitimation, name, and all is gone; Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakspere.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine. Locke.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

LEGUME. n. s. [legume, Fr. legumen, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans: in general, all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyer.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbuthnot.

LEGUMINOUS. adj. [leguminosus, Fr. from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous foods: as oats, barley, and wheat: or of some of the siliquose or leguminous; as, peas or beans. Arbuthnot.

LEISURELY. adv. [from leisurely.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisurely ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity. Hooker.

LEISURABLE. adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inexcusable in his works of leisureable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.

LEISURE. n. s. [leisure, French.]

Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You may enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can diminish your mind. Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisure to attend on you. Shakspere.

They summon'd up their malice, break took her; Commanded me to follow; and attend The leisure of their answer. Shakspere.

O happy youth! For whom thy fates reserve to fair a bride: He sigh'd, and bid us leisure more to say, His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen, The leisure and enforcement of the time Forbids to dwell on. Shakspere's Richard III.

LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry. He was the wretchedest thing when he was young. So long a growing, and so leisurely That, if the rule be true, he should be gracious. Shakspere.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Hayward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of three score and ten intricate arches. Addison.

LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately. The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste, Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run; Or if with caution leisurely we pass, Their numerous groins might charge us one by one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.

LEMAN. n. s. [Generally supposed to be laimant, the lover, Fr. but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leef, Dut. or leop, Sax. beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hannmer.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye; But vanquish'd, thine eternal bonds slave make, And me thy worthy weed unto thy leman take. Spenser.

A cup of wine, That's brisk and fine, And drink unto the leman mine. Shakspere.

LE'MMA. n. s. [λέμμα; lemme, French.]

A proposition previously assumed.

LE'MON. n. s. [limon, Fr. limonium, low Latin.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges. Arbuthnot.

The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours. Mortimer.

Bear me, Pomona!

To where the lemon and the piercing lime, With the deep orange, glowing through the green, Their lighter glories blend. Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty. Miller.

LEMONADE. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Them, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade. Arbut.

TO LEND. v. a. preterit, and part. pass. lent; [lennan, Sax. leenen, Dut.]

2. To borrow of supply, or assistance of.

In common words things he call'd lenders With dull unwillingness to pay a debt, Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent; Much more to be thus opposite with Heaven. Shaksp.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend; To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend. Dryden.

3. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakspere.

The fair blessing we roughcast to lend; Now can we spare you long, though often we may lend. Dryden.

4. To afford; to grant in general.

Coveatness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in leading any back again. Deacy of Plety.

Painting and poetry are two sisters to him, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poetry, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden's Description.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing state, Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor. Dryden.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience, And condescend to hear a young man speak. Addison.

Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress's eyes. Phil.

LE'NDER. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the rate be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade. Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors, To call for money. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

LEN'OTH. n. s. [from leng, Sax.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Twinnam a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mesentius rushes on his foes, And first unhappy Aeron overthrows; Stretch'd at his length he spurs the swarting ground. Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores Between my father and my mother lay. Shaksp.

To get from th' uneasy, and Ralph, free; Left danger, fears, and foes, behind, And bent, at least, three lengths the wind. Hudib.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste, The future but a length beyond the past. Dryden.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd, What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast? Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of its extent: duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths. Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Hear a great monarch, still augmenting his state, With length of days, and every day like the first. Dryden.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name, Such length of labour for to visit Rome. Dryden.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.
If Lentia, who lent me this account, will acquit me with the worthy gentleman's name, I will insert it at length in one of my papers. Spectator.

8. Distance.
He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging. Clarendon.

9. Eng; latter part of any assignable time.
Churches purged of things burdensome, all was brought at the length unto that wherein we now stand. Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both. Hooker.

10. At LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms, Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard, And held us long asunder. Dryden.

To LENTHEN. v. u. [from length.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Feeling dew with spangles deck'd the glade, And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Prune your mind to mirth and merriment, Which bears a thousand harms, and lengthens life. Shakespeare.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Daniel.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity. Aster.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. To LENGTHEN out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.

To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

To LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.

Still his further from its end;

Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LENGTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.] According to the length; in a longitudinal direction.

LENTEN. adj. [leniens, Latin.]

LENTIFY. n. f. As emollient, or affusive application.

I dressed it with lenients. Wylman's Surgery.

To LENTIFY. v. n. [lenifier, old Fr. lenia, Lat.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying value. Bacon.

All lenifying simples, known of long time, he presses out, and pours their noble juice. These first infused, to lenify the pain, He tugs with pinners, but he tugs in vain. Dryden.

LENTIFY. adj. [lenify, Fr. lenio, Lat.]

Affusive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an infection of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon.

There is a lenient lenitive expelling the fumes without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils. Arbuthnot.

LENTIFY. n. f.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

2. A palliative.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it would be brought to delectatory rigours. South.

LENTITY. n. f. [lentitas, Lat.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent, Of meer compassion, and of lenity, To ease your country. Shakespeare.

Lenity must gain The mighty men, and please the discontent. Daniel.

Albeit to smother a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated. Hayward.

*These jealousies Have begun one root, the old imprison'd king, Whose lenity first plow'd the gaping crowd:

But when long try'd, and found supremely good, Like Aepus's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryden.

LENS. n. f. [from resemblance to the seed of a lentil.]

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually called a lens; such is a burning-glass, or spectacle-glass, or an object glass of a telescope. Newton.

According to the difference of the lens, I used various distances. Newton.

LENT. The part. pass. from lend.

By Jove the stranger and the poor are sent, And what to those we give, to Jove is lent. Pope.

LENT. n. f. [lenten, the spring, Sax.] The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ash Wednesday to Easter.

Lent is from lenti gage, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitor, the Germans, use lenti. Camden.

LENTEN. adj. [from lent.] Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My tent, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you! Shakespeare's Hamlet.

She quench'd her fire at the flood, And with a lenten salad cool'd her blood. Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

LENTICULAR. adj. [lenticular, French.] Doubly convex: of the form of a lens.

The crystalline humour is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on Creation.

LENTIFORM. adj. [lens and forma, Lat.] Having the form of a lens.

LENTIGINOUS. adj. [from lentigo, Lat.] Scurfy; scurfaceous.

LENTIGO. n. f. [Latin.] A freckly or scurfy eruption upon the skin; such especially as is common to women in childbearing. Quincy.

LENTIL. n. f. [lens, Lat. lentille, Fr.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, the point of which becomes a short pod, containing orbicular seeds, for the most part convex; the leaves are conjugate, growing to one mid-rib, and are terminated by tendrils. Miller.

The Philistines were gathered together, where was a piece of ground full of lentils. 2 Samuel.

LENTISCK. n. f. [lentiscus, Lat. lentisque, Fr.] Lentick wood is of a pale brown, almost whitish, resinous, fragrant, and acid: it is the tree which produces mastick, esteemed astringent and balsamick. Hill.

LENTOUS. adj. [lentus, Latin.] Vitious; tenacious; capable to be drawn out.

In this spawn of a lentous and transparent body, are to be discerned many specks which become black, a substance more compacted and terrefactive than the other; for it riseth not in distillation. Brown.

LEOD. n. f. Leod signifies the people; or, rather, a nation, country, &c. Thus, leodgar is one of great interest with the people or nation. Gibson's Camden.

LEOF. n. f. Leof denotes love; so leofwin is a winner of love; leofan, best beloved: like these Agapetus, Erasmus, Philo, Amandus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

LEONINE. adj. [leoninus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a lion; having the nature of a lion.

2. Leonine verses are those of which the end rhymes to the middle; so named from Leo, the inventor: as

Gloria in excelsis deo conceditur honor.

LEOPARD. n. f. [leo and pardus, Latin.] A spotted beast of prey.

Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf, Or horse or oxen from the leopard, As you fly from your oft-fishhook slaves. Shakspeare.

A leopard is every way, in shape and actions, like a cat: his head, teeth, tongue, feet, claws, tail, like a cat's: he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kittens; leaps at the prey, as a cat at a mouse; and will also spit much after the same manner: so that they seem to differ, just as a kite doth from an eagle. Greene.

Before the king tame leopards led the way, And troops of lions innocently play. Dryden.

LEPER. n. f. [lepra, leprosus, Lat.] One infected with a leprosy.

I am no loathsome leper; look on me. Shakspeare.

know all things.

The affix will do very well for transmitters, and the hairs will make excellent letter carriers. L'Estran.

The style of letters ought to be free, easy, and natural; as near approaching to familiar conversation as possible: the two best qualities in conversation are, good humour and good breeding; those letters are therefore certainly the best that shew
the most of these two qualities. Walsh.

Mrs. P. B. has writ to me, and is one of the best letter writers I know; very good sense, civility, and friendship, without any stiffness or constraint. Swift.

3. The verbal expression; the literal meaning.

Touching translations of holy scripture, we may not disallow of their painful travels herein, who strictly have tied themselves to the very original letter. Hooker.

In obedience to human laws, we must observe the letter of the law, without doing violence to the reason of the law, and the intention of the lawgiver. Tay.

Those words of his must be understood not according to the bare rigour of the letter, but according to the allowances of expression. South Sermon.

What! since the pretor did my fetters loose,
And left me free by my own dispose,
May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden.

4. Letters without the singular; learning.

The Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned? John.

5. Any thing to be read.

Good laws are at best but a dead letter. Addis.

6. Type with which books are printed.

The iron ladies that letter founders use to the casting of printing letters, are kept constantly in melting metal. Mason.

To LETTER. v. a. [from letter.] To stamp with letters.

I observed one weight lettered on both sides;
and I found on one side, written in the dialect of men, and underneath it, calamities; on the other side was written, in the language of the gods, and underneath, blessings. Addison.

LETTERED. adj. [from letter.] Literate; educated to learning.

A martial man, not sweetened by a lettered education, is apt to have a tincture of ignorance. Catther.

The species are, common or garden lettuce;
cabbage lettuce; black lettuce; white and black cos; white cos; red capuchin lettuce. Milner.

Fat colworts, and comarum purfoliate,
Cold lettuce, and refreshing porifera. Sponser.

Lettuce is thought to be poisonous, when it is so old as to have milk. Bucan's Natural History.

The medicaments proper to diminish milk, are lettuce, purslane, audive. Wijman's Surgery.

LEVANT. adj. [levant, Fr.] Eastern.

Thwart of those, as force
Forth rush the levant, and the pendent winds, Euros and Zephyr. Milton's Paradise Lost.

LEVANT. n. f. The east, particularly those coasts of the Mediterranean east of Italy.

LEVATOR. n. f. [Lat.] A chirurgical instrument, whereby depressed parts of the skull are lifted up.

Some surgeons bring out the bone in the bore;
but it will be safer to raise it up with your levator,
when it is but lightly retained in some part. Wijem.

LEUCOPHLEGMACY. n. f. [from leuco- phlegmatick.] Paleness, with viscid juices and cold sweatings.

Spirits produce debility, flatulency, fevers, leu- cophlegmacy, and dropsies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LEUCOPHLEGMATICK. adj. [from leuco- phlegma.] Having such a constitution of body where the blood is of a pale colour, viscid, and cold, whereby it stuffs and bloats the habit, or raises white tumours in the feet, legs, or any other parts; and such are commonly athmatick and dropical.

Athmatick persons have voracious appetites, and for want of a right sanguification are leuco- phlegmatick. Arbuthnot.

LEVEE. n. f. [French.]

1. The time of rising.

2. The concourse of those who crowd round a man of power in a morning.

Wouldst thou be first minister of state;
To have thy leves crowded with resort,
Of a depending, gaping, servile court? Dryden.

None of her Sylvan subjects made their court,
Leves and couches pass'd without resort. Dryden.

LEVEL. adj. [from level, Saxon.]

1. Even; not having one part higher than another.

The doors
Discover ample spaces o'er the smooth
And level pavement. Milton.

The garden, seated in the level floor,
She left behind. Dryden's Boocace.

2. Even with any thing else; in the same line or plane with any thing.

Our navy is address'd, our pow'r collected,
And ev'ry thing lies level to our wish. Shakespeare.

Now shaves with level wing the deep. Milton.

There is a knowledge which is very proper to man, and lies level to human understanding, the knowledge of our Creator, and of the duty we owe to him. Tillotson.

3. Having no gradations of superiority.

Be level in preferences, and you will soon be as level in your learning. Bentley.

To LEVEL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make even; to free from inequalities; as, he levels the walks.

2. To reduce to the same height with something else.

Let's bright the moon,
But opposite in level with who's set, Milton.

He will thy foes with silent shame confound;
And their proud structures level with the ground. Sendy.

3. To lay flat.

We know by experience, that all downright rains do evermore discover the violence of outrageous winds, and beat down and level the swelling and mountainous billows of the sea. Raleigh.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns,
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And not regarding difference of degrees,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryden.

4. To bring to equality of condition.

Reason can never assent to the admission of those brutish appetites which would over-run the soul, and level its superior with its inferior faculties. Deacy of Floty.

5. To point in taking aim; to aim.

Each at the head
Level'd his deadly aim. Milton.

One to the gunners on St. Jago's tow'r, Bid 'em for shame level their cannon lower. Dry.

Iron globes which on the victor host
Level'd with such impetuous fury smote. Milton.

The construction I believe is not, globes
level'd on the host, but globes level'd smote on the host.

6. To direct to an end.

The whole body of puritans was drawn to be abettors of all villainy by a few men, whose designs from the first were level'd to destroy both religion and government. Swift.

7. To suit; to proportion.

Behold the law
And rule of beings in your Maker's mind;
And thence, like limbeck, rich ideas draw,
To fit the level'd use of humankind. Dryden.

To LEVEL. v. n.

1. To aim at; to bring the gun or arrow to the same line with the mark.

The glory of God, and the good of his church, was the thing which the apostles aimed at, and therefore ought to be the mark whereto we all level. Hooker.

2. To conjecture; to attempt to guess.

I pray thee overname them; and, as thou name'st them I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare.

3. To be in the same direction with a mark.

He to his engine flew,
Plac'd near at hand in open view,
And rais'd it till it level'd right,
Against the glow-worm tail of kites. Audibron.

4. To make attempts; to aim.

Ambitious York did level at thy crown. Shakf.

ances or inequalities.

After draining of the level in Northamptonshire, innumerable mice did upon a sudden arise. Rale.

Those bred in a mountainous country oversee those that dwell on low levels. Sendy.

2. Rate; standard; customary height.

Love of her made us raise up our thoughts above the ordinary level of the world, so as great clerks do not disdain our conference. Swift.

The praises of military men inspired me with thoughts above my ordinary level. Dryden.

3. Suitable or proportionate height.

It might perhaps advance their minds so far above the level of subjection, as T' assume to them the glory of that war. Dante.

4. A state of equality.

The time is not far off when we shall be upon the level; I am resolv'd to anticipate the time, and be upon the level with them now; for he is so that neither seeks nor wants them. Atterbury to Pope.

Providence, for the most part, sets us upon a level, and observes proportion in its dispensations towards us. Spectator.

I suppose, by the file of old friends, and the like, it must be somebody there of his own level; among whom his patty have, indeed, more friends than I could wish. Swift.

5. An instrument whereby masons adjust their work.

The level is from two to ten feet long, that it may reach over a considerable length of the work; if the plumb-line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level; but if it hangs on either side the perpendicular, the floor or work must be raised on that side, till the plumb-line hang exactly on the perpendicular. Mason.

6. Rule; plan; scheme; borrowed from the mechanic level.

Be the fair level of thy actions laid,
As if grace were will, and prudence may persuade,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

7. The line of direction in which any millary weapon is aimed.

LEV n. f. [from level]
Of a full charged confederacy, and gave thanks
To you that chok'd it. Shakespeare.
As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Dud in either her. Shakespeare.
These happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
O! fast distrust and jealousy. Waller.
8. The line in which the light passes.
Fir'd at first light with what the mule imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the boundless level of our mind
Sweat view we take, our feeble lengths behind. Pope.

LEVELLER n. f. [from level]
1. One who makes any thing even.
2. One who detroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.
You are an everlasting leveller; you won't allow encouragement to extraordinary merit. Celtier

LEVELNESS n. f. [from level]
1. Evenness; equality of surface.
2. Equality with something else.
The river Elber is exprest lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Prædham.

LEVEN n. f. [Levin, French. Commonly though less properly, written leaven; see LEAVEN.]
1. Ferment; that which being mixed with bread makes it rise and ferment.
2. Any thing capable of changing the nature of a greater mass.

The matter fermented upon the old leaven, and becometh more acid. Wijman's Surgery.
The pestifential leavens conveyed in goods. Arab.
LEVER n. f. [Levier, French.]
The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hyponomachion; only the centre is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence comes the name levers. Harris
Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? Shakespeare.
Some draw with cords, and some the monster drive
With rolls and levers. Denham.

In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance between the fulcrum and the weight; which is always by so much lesser, as the disproportion between the weight and the power is greater, and the motion itself more easy. W. Mat. Magick.
Some hoisting levers, some the wheels prepare. Dryden.

LEVERET n. f. [lievret, Fr.] A young hare.
Their travels o'er that silver field does show,
Like track of leverets in morning snow. Waller.
LEVER n. f. [from lever, Fr.] A blast on the trumpet; probably that by which the soldiers are called in the morning.
He that led the cavalcade Wore a sworder's flagellet,
On which he blew as strong a leut;
As well-lee'd lawyer on his breviate. Hudibras.

LEVEROOK n. f. [lypene, Sax.] This word is retained in Scotland and denotes the lark.
The small birds have their particular seasons; as, the leverook. Walter's Angler.
If the lark is 'twill smore as the leverook. Scotch. Prov.

LEVYABLE adj. [from levy] That may be levied.
The sums which any agreed to pay, and were not brought in, were to be levied by course of law. Bacon's Henry viii.

LEVITHAN n. f. [לִיָּוִי] A water animal mentioned in the book of Job.

By some imagined the crocodile; but in poetry generally taken for the whale.

We may, as bottleless, spend our vain command
Upon th' enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send our precepts to the Leviathan,
To come ashore. Shakespeare's Henry v.
Canst thou thrust out Leviathan with an hook? Job.
Move to embold the deep, Leviathan,
And his unwieldy train, in dreadful sport
Compet the look'd-brime. Thomson's Winter.
To LEVIGATE, v. a. [levigo, Latin.]
1. To rub or grind to an impalpable powder.
2. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.

The chyle is white, as consisting of salt, oil, and water, much brighted in smooth. Arbuthnot.
LEVIGATION n. f. [from levigate.]
Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tuff, and precious stones, into a subtle powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but unless the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear as to double the weight of the medicine. Quincy.

LEVITE n. f. [levita; Lat. from Levi.]
1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.
In the Christian church, the office of deacons succeeded in the place of the Levites among the Jews; who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. A priest; used in contempt.

LEVITICAL adj. [from levite.] Belonging to the Levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.
By the Levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was adultery. Ayliffe.

LEVITY n. f. [levitas, Latin.]
1. Lightness; not heaviness; the quality by which any body has less weight than another.
He gave the form of levity to that which ascended; to that which descended, the form of gravity. Ralph.
This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the solidity that encloses it, would ascend to the top. Bentley.
2. Inconstancy; changeableness.
They every day brouched some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection. Hooker.
Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,
Beaus bluish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call. Pope.

3. Unsteadiness; luxury of mind.
I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee.
Not out of levity, but over-power'd
By thy request. Milton's Agonistes.
4. Idle pleasure; vanity.
He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required. Colum.
5. Trilling gayety; want of seriousness.
Our graver business frowns at this levity. Shaks.
Hopton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted. Clarendon.
That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and profaneism, started up in the room of it. Atterbury.

To LEVY, v. a. [levis, French.]
1. To raise; to bring together: applied to men.
He resolved to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army. Davies.
2. To raise: applied to money.
Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war. Numbers.
Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his country such a sum of money. Clarendon.
3. To raise: applied to war. This sense, though Milton's, is improper.

They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton.
LEVY n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of raising money or men.
They have already contributed all their superfluous funds, and every new levy they make must be at the expence of their farms and commerce. Addis.

2. War raised.
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him further! Shakespeare's Macbeth.
LEWD adj. [lapede, Saxon.]

1. Lay; not clerical: from leod, people.
It is sometimes gross; ignorant. Obsolete.
For lewd men this book I writ. Sp. Crofthead.
So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they. Davies.
2. Wicked; bad; dissolute.

If some be admitted into the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitcliffe.
Before they did oppress the people only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant. Davies.
3. Lustful; libidinous.
He is not falling on a lewd love-bed;
But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare.
Then lewd Anchermolus he laid in dust,
Who stain'd his step-dame's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

LEWDLY adv. [from lewd.]
1. Wickedly; naughtily.
A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state. Sha.
2. Libiduously; lustfully.
He lov'd his lady Elred, lewdly lov'd;
Whose wanton pleasure shon too much did please.
That quite his heart from Queeneime remov'd. Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,
The watch'd texts deserve no comments here. Dry.
LEWDNESS n. f. [from lewd.] Lustful licentiousness.
Suffer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,
Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach. Dry.
Dionysius's letter to Nicholas is an authentic record of the lewdness committed under the reign of Caligula. Atterbury.

LEWDSTER n. f. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.
Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,
Thou that betray them do us in a chery. Shaks.

LEVIS D'OR n. f. [French.] A golden French coin, in value twelve livres, now settled at seventeen shillings. Dict.
LEXICOGAPHER n. f. [λεξικος and γραφω; lexicographe, Fr.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that buies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers acquainted with the Syriac language, have given these hints in their writings on scripture. Watts.
LEXICOGRAPHY n. f. [λεξικος and γραφω.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

LEXICON n. f. [λεξικόν.] A dictionary; a book teaching the signification of words.
Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he had not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexicon, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wife in his mother dialect only. Milton.
LEV n. f. lee, lay, are all from the Saxon leag, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter g or g. Giffon's Camden.

LIABLE n. f. [liable, from lier, old Fr.] Obnoxious; not exempt; subject; with to.
But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthenous,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall.

By weakish subtleties.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dry.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Swift.

LIAR. n. f. [from lie.] This word would analogically be liar but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it. One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity. She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!

'Twas I that kill'd her, Shakespeare's Othello.
He approves the common liar, same,
Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whenever it seems to be contradicted, Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,
Wife is thy voice, and noble is thy heart. Pope.

LIARD. adj.

1. Mingled roan. Markham.

2. Liard in Scotland denotes gray-haired: as, he's a liard old man.

LIBATION. n. f. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men. Clarendon.

The goblet then took, with nectar crown'd,
Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden.

LIBBARD. n. f. [liebard, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libbard stern.

Leave courting, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

The libbard and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africa are by Pilo resorted to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots, represent the disperseness of habitations, or towns of Africa. Brewster.

LIBEL. n. f. [libellus, Lat. libelle, Fr.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes punegyric there. Decay of Poem.

Good brav'n! that 'sots and knives should be
To with their vile resemblance may remain!

And stand recorded, at their own request,
To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

To LIBEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation, written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.

Sweet serals to fly about the streets of Rome.
What's this but libelling against the senate? Shak.
He, like a privilege of spy, whom nothing can Differed, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donne.

To LIBEL. v. a. To satirize; to lampoon.

Is the peerage of England dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? it is to be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalous magnanimity to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare
Some wicked wits have libell'd all the fair. Pope.

LIBELLER. n. f. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden's Juvenal.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners. Tatler.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth; equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

LIBELLOUS. adj. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious rumour that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Wotton.

LIBERAL. adj. [liberalis, Lat. liberal, Fr.]

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parsimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well-known over all,
To be both gracious and eke liberal. Spenser.

Sprung would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine.

Men of his way should be most liberal,
They're set here for examples. Shakespeare.

Needs must the power
That made us, and for us this ample world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good

As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton.

The liberal are scarce alone,
For what we frankly give, for ever is our own.

Granville.

4. It has of before the thing, and to before the person.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon's Essay.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

LIBERALITY. n. f. [liberalitas, Lat. liberalité, Fr.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows no court
With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shaksp.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou mayst find nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality be not call away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Den.

LIBERALLY. adv. [from liberal.]

1. Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James.

2. Not meanly; magnanimously.

LIBERTINE. n. f. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfin'd; one at liberty.

When he speaks,
The air, a chamber'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honest sentences. Shaksp.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may revel,
Free and unquell'd. Rome's June Shore.

Want of power is the only bond that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex. Clarissa.

3. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
Disguis'd clients, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their condition, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe's Perjury.

LIBERTINE. adj. [libertin, Fr.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are many that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent inquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals? Swift.

LIBERTINISM. n. f. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity, and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIBERTY. n. f. [liberté, Fr. libertas, Lat.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heavenly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Justly thou abhorst it:
The son, who, on the quiet state of man
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue Rational liberty; yet know what, since
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Daniel.

5. Relaxation of restraint: as, he fees himself at liberty to choose his condition.

Licence they mean when they cry liberty. Milne.

6. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LIBIDINOUS. n. f. [libidinosus, Lat.] Lewd; lustful.

Now revolt from the faith, because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of the lusts, if wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LIBIDINOUSLY. adv. [from libidinous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LIBRARIAN. n. f. [librarius, Lat.]

1. One who has the care of a library.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Christ had three swallows, and three repents, the waves: thus must be understood of regular tales. There are indeed but two tales in a day, but thus the error of the librarians. Boncompagni.

LIBRARY. n. f. [librum, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to advise,
There charged to the prince's hand to risks
An ancient book, high printed monuments; Palmer Queen.

I have given you the library of a printer, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dry.

To LIBRATE. v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LIBRATION. n. f. [libratio, Lat. libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration of the body. Dryden's Darius.

Their planets still
In loose librations stretch'd, to wait the void Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

a. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the circumference, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that at full moon they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dick. Trepan.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not at all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Greene.

LIBRATORY. adj. [from libro, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LIBRE, the plural of loufe.

Red bladders rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews, that loathsome lice begot;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden.

LICÉBANE, n. f. [lice and banc.] A plant.

LICENTSE, n. f. [licentia, Lat. licence, Fr.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make blusidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my faults
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

They bat for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free;
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to licence by too just a name. Rescom.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate. Judith.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars; could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Acts.

To LICÉNZÉ, v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

Wit's Titans brav'd the fates,
And the poor gown'd with licenc'd blasphemies. Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which he wou'd, that when he list he could think his thoughts. Wotton.

LICÉNZÉ, n. f. [from license.] A grant of permission; commonly a tool of power.

LICÉNTIATE, n. f. [licentiatu, low Lat.]

1. A man who uses licence. Not in use.

The licentiate somewhat licentious, tell they should prejudice possibill liberty, will pardon themselves for doubting or rejecting a letter, if the same fall empty. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of licentiate or maister in this faculty. Ayliffe.

To LICÉNTIATE, v. a. [licencier, Fr.] To permit; to encourage by licence.

We may not hazard either the stiling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICÉNTIOUS, adj. [licencicus, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed seed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swoll increase,
To all licentious lust, and 'gan exceed
The measure of her means, and natural first need. Fairy Queen.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate? Shaksp.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Rescom.

LICÉNTIOUSLY, adv. [from licentious.]

With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiates, somewhat licentious, will pardon themselves. Camden's Remains.

LICÉNTIOUSNESS, n. f. [from licentious.]

Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Raleigh.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH, n. f. [lice, Saxon.] A dead carcass; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LICHOWL, n. f. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretel death.

To LICK, v. a. [licen, Saxon; lecken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Aesculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Indidras.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trash, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakspere.

3. To lick up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numbers.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Care'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope.

LICK, n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; rough usage; a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar,
and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH, } adj. [licencius, a guttural, LICKEROUS, } Saxon.] This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor, but with like.

1. Nice in the choice of food.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a lickerish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gulf.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephen, fond boy, delighted, did not know
That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
But lick'rous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sid.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Ercenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits; liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Wot.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save
His body, destin'd to that living grave;
The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
And nothing but the man would fave her term. Dry.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it ran from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite.

This sense I doubt.
Would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS, n. f. [from lickerish.]
Niceness of palate.

LICORICE, n. f. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Italian.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The insipid juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the trike of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Lill's Mat. Med.

LICTOR, n. f. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy factors
Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakspere.

Proconsuls to their provinces
Hasting, or on return, in robes of state,
Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
Though in his county-town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden.

LID, n. f. [hlid, Saxon; lied, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hops, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shaksp.
Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Davies.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
As any muse's tongue could speak;

When from its lid a pearly tear Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
And drive departed souls to Styx:
That rod was just a type of Sid's
Which o'er a British senate's lid
Could scatter opium full as well,
And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE, n. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds seas like a leech. Shaksp.
All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow, as lie, yeat, &c. Feacham on Drugging.

Lie. v. a. [lieg, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

Then he that lieth (speak) with my sword
I'll prove the lie that lieth to me. Shakespeare.
It is properly an adversary representation of something contrary to, or at least not the inward sense of the mind; in that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lie. Smith.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can choose an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a formulaary phrase.

That lie shall lie to heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
Till thou the lie givest, and that lie rest
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakespeare.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.
The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To lie. v. n. [leagan, Saxon; liegen,
Dutch.]

4. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, lie lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare.

If a soul lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered. Leviticus.

Should I lie against my right? Job.

5. To exhibit false representation.

Informs us, will the sup'rior treat?
Or do the prints and papers lie? Swift.

To lie. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [liegan, Saxon; liggen, Dutch.]

6. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

7. To rest; to press upon.

Death lies on her like an untimely snow
Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakespeare.

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Van.

8. To be reposed in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isaiah.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place. Genesis.

9. To be in a state of decumbiture.

How many good young princes would do so;
their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is? Shakespeare.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death;
I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that the may be healed. Mark.

10. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller,

That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,

Lay down again, and close'd his weary eyes. Dryden.

Forlorn he mused, and persecuted lie;

Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

11. To be laid up or reposed.

I have seen, where copperas is made, great varieties of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

12. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Ismales, for that has ever lied at their heads. Temple.

Ver. 11.

8. To reside.

If they don't well; shall thou not be accepted?

and if thou don't not well, lie at the door. Gen.

9. To be placed or situate, with respect to something else.

Deserts, where there lay no way. Wydor.

I lie

To those happy climes that lie

Where day never shuts his eye. Milton.

There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier of Envy.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon afflictively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy ways. Psalms.

He that commits a sin shall find

The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,

Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause. Crece.

Show the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Addison.

11. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that he upon their hands. Addison's Guardian.

12. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.

13. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

The highways lie waste, the wayfarer man careless. Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watts.

14. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight.

Locke.

15. To be in prison.

Your imprisonment shall not be long;

I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakespeare.

16. To be in a bad state.

Why will you lie pining and pinching yourself in such a louse, starving course of life? L'Estr.

The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces.

L'Estrange's Fables.

Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie

bellying with your finger in your mouth? L'Estr.

17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.

To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.

It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man,

lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson.

As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addison.

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious;

and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded, Swift.

18. To consist.

The image of it gives me content already; and

I trust it will grow to a most perfect perfection.

—It lies much in your holding on. Shakespeare.

He that thinks that diversion lies in hard labour, forgets the early rising and hard riding of hunters. Locke.

19. To be in the power; to belong to.

Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies, to preserve the lives of all men? Shakespeare.

He shows himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blacken it, as much as in him lies. Stillingfleet on Isidore.

Mars is the warrior's god; in him it lies

On whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.

His bones are tall of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Isaiah.

26. To lay in. To be in childbed.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how hard is it to lie in and sleep, or to lounge themselves in the sunning, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Swift.

You confine yourself most unreasonably. Come,

you must go visit the lady that lies in. Shakespeare.

She had lain in, and her right breast had been apostemated. Wichman's Surgery.

The doctor has practised by sea and land, and therefore cures the green sickness and lyings in. Spenser.

When Florimel design'd to lie privately in;

She chose with such prudence her pangs to conceal,

That her nurse, nay her midwife, scarce heard her once sigh. Prior.

Hysterical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in. Arbuthnot on Diet.

27. To lie under. To be subject to; to be oppressed by.

A generous person will lie under a great disad-vantage. Smalridge's Sermons.

This mistake never ought to be imputed to Dryden, but to those who suffered to make a genius to lie under necessity. Pope.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily. Atterbury.

28. To lay upon. To become the matter of obligation or duty.

There are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls, lies upon them; the greatest account whereof will be required at their hands. Bacon.

It should lie upon him to make out how matter,

by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall,

without over erring or miscarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies. Bentley's Sermon.

29. To lie with. To converse in bed.

Pardon me, Bassanio,

For by this ring lie I with me. Shakespeare.

30. It may be observed of this word in general, that it commonly implies something of sluggishness, inaction, or staid-ness, applied to persons; and some gravity or permanency of condition, applied to things.

LIE. adj. [leag, Saxon; lieg, Dutch.]

Dear; beloved. Obsolete.

My liege lord the thus beguiled had,

For he was flesh; all flesh doth frailty breed. Spenser.

You, with the rest,

Causeless have laid disgrace on my head;

And with your best endeavour lay it up

My liege liege to be mine enemy. Shakespeare.

LIE. adv. Willingly; now used only in familiar speech.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lie have the misery of freedom,

as the misery of imprisonment. Shakespeare.

LIEGE, adj. [lige, Fr. ligio, Italian; ligius, low Latin.]

1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liegeman for subject.

2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]

Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry VIII. for their king and liege lord? Spenser.

My lady liege, said he,
What all your les desire is sovereignty. Dryden.

So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be called natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Grew's Cynography.

LIEGE, n. f. Sovereign; superior lord: scarcely in use.

O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears I had forefall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shak.

LIGAMENT. n. f. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

1. Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any fence, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise. Quincy.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground! Shakspeare.
The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes. Haller.

tura*, Latin.]

1. Any thing tied round another; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases. Brown.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strait ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take off the ligature, it will beat immediately. Ray on the Creation.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Speculator.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arms to my thighs. Cutler's Travels.

2. The act of binding.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his veins. Arbutnot.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropy, as by strong ligature or compression. Arbut.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LIGHT. n. f. [leohr, Saxon.]

may be easily enough lighted on, by those conversant in the solutions of mercury. Boyle.

He sought by arguments to smooth her pain;
Nor those avail'd: at length he lighted on one,
Before two moons their orb with light adorn,
If heav'n allow me life, I will return. Dryden.

Truth, light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than error; for what is so taken up by us, may be false as well as true; and he has not done his duty, who has thus stumbled upon truth in his way to preferment. Locke.

Whoever first lit on a parcel of that substance we call gold, could not rationally take the bulk and figure to depend on its real effluence. Locke.

As wily Reynard walk'd the forests at night,
On a tragedian's mask he chanc'd to light;
Turning it o'er, he murr'd with didkin,
How vast a head is here without a brain! Addison.

pitch on at their swarming, that they may not be in danger of being lost for want of a fighting place.

Morimer's Husbandry.
To LIGHTEN, v. n. [lit, lige, Saxon.]

1. To flash, with thunder.

This dreadful night,
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night;
It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens. Shakespeare.

The lightning that lighteth out of the one part under heaven, sheweth unto the other part. Luke.

2. To shine like lightning.

Yet looks he like a king; behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth Controlling majesty. Shakespeare's Richard II.

LIGHTNESS, n. f. [from light.]

1. Want of weight; absence of weight:
the contrary to heaviness.

Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine, because of their length, straightness, and lightness. Bacon's Natural History.

Suppose many degrees of heaviness and lightness in particles, so as many might float in the air
a good while before they fell. Burnet.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.

For, unto knight there is no greater shame,
Than lightness and inconsistency in love. P. Quere.

Of two things they will chide one; namely, whether they would, to their own disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, signifies him, whose reflection they had in so inopportune manner desired, or else considered unto that demand. Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gulf;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shaksp.

3. Unchastity; want of conduct of women.
Is in the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that emboldened such base fancies towards me? Sidney.

Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our care,
Than woman's lightness? Shaksp. Lear. for Meaf.

4. Agility; nimbleness.
LAUGHTING. n. f. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]

1. The flash that attends thunder.
Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentary. Muichenbrock.

Scarcely thinks the lightning born before the thunder;
What tells us then they both together are? Davies.

Salmonous, setting cruel pains I found
For emulating Jove; the cutting sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glutting blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their torry rays. Dryden.

No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burst the moment I beheld. Granville.

2. Mitigation; abatement, [from to lighten, to make less heavy.]

How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind mischance from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Spenser.

LIGHTS. n. f. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing; we say, lights of other animals, and lungs of men.

The complaint lights chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no seat for any sharp disease. Hayward.

LIGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]

1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.

Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are lightsome, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened, by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call aether, the place of the supposed element of fire, is effected and qualified. Raleigh.

White walls make rooms more lightsome than black. Bacon.

Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon's Natural History.

His course exalted through the Ram had run,
Through Taurus, and the lightsome realms of love. Dryden.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.

It suiteth to fitly with that lightsome affection of joy, wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the names that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

LIGHTSOMENESS. n. f. [from lightsome.]

1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darknessness.

It is to our atmosphere that the variety of colours, which are painted on the skies, the lightsomeness of our air, and the twilight, are owing. Chambers.

2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.

LIQUOR. n. f. [liquum aloes, Lat.]
Aloes wood.

The aloes spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of figs which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters. Nam.

1. LIQUEOUS. adj. [liqueus, Lat. ligneus, Fr.]
Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.

It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more liqueous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Natural History.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchyma and liqueous part of it, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grew.

LIGNUMVITÆ. n. f. [Lat.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.

LIQURE. n. f. A precious stone.
The third row a liqure, an agate, and an amethyst. Eradus.

A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.

His desire
By conversation with his like to help,
Or solace his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange.

Sho'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more
To women than they had before;
This might their natural fancy strike,
Since every being loves its like. Swift.

2. Used with had; near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just; perhaps had is a corruption for was.

Report being carried from one to another in my like, had like to have been my interthrow. Raleigh.

LIKE. adv.

1. In the same manner; in the same manner as: it is not always easy to determine whether it be an adverb or adjective.

The joyous nymphs, and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their isle sweet,
Now hearing them sit heavily lament.
Like heavily lamenting from them went! Spenser.

Like as a father pities his children, so the Lord pities them that fear him. Psalms.

Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? Is this to be like-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson.

What will be the like when he sees me neglected, and forsaken? Shakspere.

2. In such a manner as befits.

Be strong, and quit yourselves like men! Samuel.

3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.

I like the work well; as it be demanded, as like enough it will, I'd have it copied. Shaksp.

To LIKE. v. a. [lican, Sax. liken, Dut.]

1. To choose with some degree of preference.

As nothing can be so reasonably spoken as to content all men, so this speech was not of them all liked. Knollys.

He gave such an account as made it appear that he liked the design. Clarendon.

We like our present circumstances well, and dream of no change. Atterbury.

2. To approve; to view with approbation, not fondness.

Though they did not like the evil he did, yet they liked him that did the evil. Sidney.

He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shopkeepers, after to like their company. Sidney.

He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

For several virtues

I have lik'd several women; never any With so full soul. Shakspere's Tempest.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the pains of love. Shaksp.

Scarcely any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself. South.

Beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.

3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.

Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
If ever covetous hand, or insatiable eye,
Or lips he laid on thing that lik'd him best,
Should be his prey, Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Say, my fair brother now, if this device
Do like you, or may you to like entice. Hubbard.

To LIKE. v. n.

1. To be pleased with; with of before the thing approved. Obsolete.

Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependency upon God. Hooker.

The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Knollys.

2. To choose; to list; to be pleased.

The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Dent.

He that has the prison doors set open imperfectly at liberty, because he may either go or stay, as he best likes. Locke.

L I K E N I N G . n. f. [from likely.]
L I K E L I K E N E S S .

1. Appearance; show. Obsolete.
 What of his heart preserve you to his face,
 By any likelihood he should to-day?
 —that with no man here he is offended. Shaksp.

2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
 The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
 Like to the senators of antique Rome,
 Go forth and fetch their pious ring Cæsar in.
 As by a law, but loving likelihood,
 Were now the general of our gracious empress,
 As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
 How many would the peaceful city quit
 To welcome him? Shakspere's Henry v.

There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Maleigh.

3. Probability; very similitude; appearance of truth.

As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there been more, it would by likelihood as well have noted many. Hooker.

Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdo. Shakspere.

I never yet did hurt,
 To lay down likelihood, and forms of hope. Shaksp.

As there is no likelihood that the place could be so altered, so there is no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses. Maleigh.

Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be;
 there every, even the least, probability, or likelihood of danger, should be provided against. South.

There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the evangelists, which were not completed till after their death, and had no likelihood of being so when they were pronounced by our blessed Saviour. Aad.

Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine, who should have a visit from the other world:
 the first horror it raised would go off, as new diversions come on. Atterbury.

L I K E L Y . adj. [from like.]

1. Such as may be liked; such as may please. Obsolete.

These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first look of a likely beauty. Sidm.

St. John, they are your likeliest men; I would have you served with the best. Shakspere.

2. Probable; such as may in reason be thought or believed; such as may be thought more reasonably than the contrary: as, a likely story, that is, a credible story.

L I K E L Y . adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought.

While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that imported him to know. Glanville.

T O L I K E N . v. a. [from like.] To represent as having resemblance; to compare.

The prince broke your head for likening him to a flogging man of Windsor. Shakspere's Henry iv.

For who, though with the tongue
 Of angels, can relate; or to what things
 Taken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
 Human imagination to such height
 Of God-like power? Milton's Paradise Lost.

L I K E N E S S . n. f. [from like.]

1. Resemblance; similitude.

They all do live, and moved are
 To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenser.
 A translator is to make his author appear as charming as he can, provided he maintains his character, and make him not unlike himself. Translation is a kind of drawing after the life, where this is a double sort of likeness, a good one, and a bad one. Dryden.

There will be found a better likeness, and a worse;
 and the better is continually to be chosen. Dryden.

2. Form; appearance.

Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shakspere.

It is safer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy. L'Estrange.

3. One who resembles another; a copy; a counterpart.

Poor Cupid, fawning, scarce could speak.
 Indeed, mamma, I do not know ye:
 Alas! how easy my mistake!

I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prim.

L I K E W I S E . adv. [like and wise.] In like manner; also; moreover; too.

Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things. Mother.

So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almaine, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather. Bacon.

Spirit of vitriol poured to pure unmix'd serum, conglutates as if it had been boiled. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect conglutination of the serum likewise;
 but with some different phenomena. Arbuthnot.

L I K I N G . adj. [perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump;
 in a state of plumpness.

I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why should he see your faces worse liking, than the children which are of your sort? Daniel.

L I K I N G . n. f. [from like.]

1. Good state of body; plumpness.

I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I'm in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. Shakspere.

Their young ones are in good liking; they grow up with corn. Job.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lutiness; and, being in good liking, were set on a stall, when exposed to sale, to shew the good habit of their body. Dryden's Notes to Pers.

2. State of trial.

The royal soul, that, like the lab'ring moon,
 By charms of art was hurried down,
 Forced with regret to leave her native sphere,
 Came but a while on liking here. Dryden.

3. Inclination.

Why do you longer feed on loathed light,
 Or liking find to gaze on earthly mould? F. Queen.

L I K I N G . n. f. [from the verb.] Delight in; pleasure in; with to.

There are limits to be set betwixt the bookish and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write; and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

L I L A C H . n. f. [lilac, lilds Fr.] A tree.

The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilach tree.

L I L I E D . adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more
 By shady Loden's lily'd banks. Milton.

L I L Y . n. f. [lilium, Latin.]

There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, and untinged of various sorts. Miller.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
 Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
 And make the filken strings delight to kiss them;
 He would not then have touch'd them for his life!

Shakspere.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
 No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
 Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
 That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
 I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakspere.

Arno, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Peuchum.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
 And if our pride will to our reason yield,
 It must by sure comparison be shown,
 That on the regal seat great David's son,
 Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r, Shines with less glory than that humble flower. Prior.

For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

L I L Y - D A F F O D I L . n. f. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.

L I L Y - H Y A C I N T H . n. f. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

A high, a shy flower, composed of six leaves shaped like the flower of hyacinth; the petals are fleshy, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant: one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red. Miller.

L I L Y of the Valley, or May lily. n. f.
 [lilium convallium.]

The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods. Miller.

Lily of the valley has a strong root that runs into the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

L I L Y - L I V E R . adj. [lily and liver.] Whitelivered; cowardly.

A bite, lily-livered, action-taking knave. Shaksp.

L I M A T U R E . n. f. [limatura, Latin.] Fllings of any metal; the particles rubbed off by a file.

L I M B . n. f. [lim, Sax. and Scot. lem, Dan.]

1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.

A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
 And large proportion of his strong knit limbs.

Shakspere.

Oh! that I had been here, to tear her limb meat!
Shakspere.

Now am I come each limb to survey,
 If thy appearance answer loud report! Milton.

2. [limbe, Fr. limbus, Lat.] An edge; a border; a philosophical word.

By moving the prism about, the colours again emerged out of the whiteness, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at the outward limb
 the red and yellow. Newton.

T O L I M B . v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,
 They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
 Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milt.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

L I M B E C K . n. f. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alambick.] A still.

Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell,
 Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes.

Feltham.

Fires of Spain, and the line,
 Whose countries limbecks upon bodies be,
 Canst thou for gun bear? Donne.

Call up, unbound,
 In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
 Urn'd through a limbeck to this naked form. Milt.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Howell.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
 Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise,
 It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the noceat brood. Philips.

L I M B E R . adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A fleet of five years' age, large limb'd, and fed,
 To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope.

L I M B E R . adj. Flexible; easily bent; pli-ant; lithe.

You put me off with limber vows. Shakspere.

I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Anselm could subsist, being the indubitate heir of the Saxon line; but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckon'd him beneath his fear. Watson.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
 Thick, or worm; those wad'd their limber tails
 For wings; and smallest lineaments exact.

In all the livens deck'd of summer's pride. Milt.

She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long tot limber ears to defend her. Moor.

The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspers' arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.

L I M B E R N E S S . n. f. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

Limbo. v. f. [Ex quo sit limbus inferorum. Du Cange.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.

No, he is in tarter limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakespeare.

Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss.

Sardus.

All these up which I'd lost
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, sing call'd
The paradise of fools.

Milnes's Paradise Lost.

2. Any place of misery and constraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Vivia straight brought on the charge;
And in the felt came limbo put

The knight and squire, where he was shut,
Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am Left in limbo.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Lim. n. f. [lim, gelyman, Sax. to glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird I thou'dst never far the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires,
By wailful songers, whose compell'd rhymes
Should be full fraught with forcible vows.

Shakespeare.

There are new-new and new, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, where'er he goes,
His title of baron on every wench.

Danvers.

A thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs.

L'Estrange.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were Gone,
And deep-month'd dogs did forest walks surround.

Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows' hearts.

Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calc, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone.

Hill's Materia Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side.

Bacon.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen praise'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,

Swift.

But all admire Inigo Jones.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold.

Mortimer.

3. The linden tree. [linb, Sux. tilia, Lat.]

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the stalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes suffocated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners.

Miller.

These trees continue found many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Browne mentions one in Norfolk sixteen yards in circuit.

Pope.

For her the lilies hung their heads, and die.

Pope.

4. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend.

Thomson.

To Lim. v. a. [from lime.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

O bosome, black as death!
Q' lined soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged.

Shakespeare.

Example, that is terribly shown in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, diffuse succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them.

Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush,
And I, the hapless snail to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye.

Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

Shakespeare.

2. To lim with lime.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.

Shakespeare.

Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them.

L'Estr.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruin my father's house,
Who gave his blood to time the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.

Shakespeare.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming.

Child.

All sorts of pease love limed or marled land.

Mortimer.

Lim. n. f. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the neck of a lime-kiln.

Shakespeare.

They were found in a lime-kiln, and having pulled the fire, each is a little vitrified.

Woodward.

Lim. n. f. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.

Mortimer.

Lim. n. f. [lime-water.]

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quicklime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs.

Hill.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime-water alone, and some in brandy and lime- water mixed, and had from each grain a great increase.

Mortimer.

Lim. n. f. [limité, French; limitor, Lat.]
Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole circum of the mountain round about shall be most holy.

Exodus.

We went, great emperor, by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land;

Ev'n to the place where no more world is found,
But frowning billows beating on the ground.

Dryden.

To Lim. v. a. [limiter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To confine within certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

Isaiah.

Thanks I must you owe, that you
Are thieves protect; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions.

Shakespeare.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch.

Swift.

2. To restrain from a lax or general signification: as, the universe is here limited to this earth.

Limitations. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds.

Dict.

Lim. n. f. [from limit.] Placed at the boundaries as a guard or superintendant.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud limitary cherub!

Milton.

Limitation. n. f. [limitation, Fr. limi- tatio, Lat.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof.

Hooker.

Am I young?
But, as it were, in sort of limitation?

Shakespeare.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir.

This limitation, indeed, of our nation, with five others

the labour, who would look for him among the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men.

Locke.

If a king confineth by conquest he is no longer a limited monarch; if he confineth by limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure.

2. Confinement from a lax or undeterminate import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable.

Black.

Lim. n. f. A mongrel.

To Lim. v. a. [edumener, Fr. to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint
any thing.

Many eyes doth his effigies witness,
Most truly lim'd, and living in your face.

Shakespeare.

Emblems limed in lively colours.

Peacock.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limed in their unaffected beauty?

Granville.

Lim. n. f. [corrupted from enluminer,
a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limers at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind.

Granville's Scripps.

Poets are limers of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;

Granville.

Words are the paint by which their thoughts are
And nature is their object to be drawn.

Granville.

Lim. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nile, which settled by degrees unto a rich land.

Lim'd in pure love.

Shakespeare.

Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping fire.

Shakespeare.

How far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance.

Shakespeare.

When Pluto, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot.

Bacon.

Limping death, last'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

Dryden.

The limping smith observ'd the Goggin's feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word.

Dryden.

Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight;
Or both in friendly comfort join'd;
The consequence limps false behind.

Prior.

Lim. n. f. A kind of shellfish.

Ainslie.

Lim. adj. [limpid, Fr. limpidus, Lat.]
Clear; pure; transparent.

The springs which were clear, fresh, and limpid, became thick and turbid, and impregnated with sulphur as long as the earthquake lasts.

Woodward.

The brook that purrs along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Gently diffus'd into a limpid plain.

Thomson.

Lim. n. f. [from limpid.] Clearness; purity.

Lim. adv. [from limp.] In a lame halting manner.

Two neighbouring trees with walls encompass'd round,

One a hard oak, a softer linden one. Dryden.

LINE. n. f. [linea, Latin.]

1. Longitudinal extension.
Even the planets, upon this principle, must gravitate no more towards the sun; so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets. Bentley.

2. A slender string.
Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings;
To see the then sole hope, and in design
Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line. Waller.

A line seldom holds to strain, or draws straight in length, above fifty or sixty feet. Mozon.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whose paths shall be familiar as the land. Dryden.
The string that sustains the angler's hook.
Victorious with their lines and eyes,
They make the fishes and the men their prize. Waller.

4. Lineaments, or marks in the hand or face.
Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour
Which then he wore. Shakespeare.

I shall have good fortune; go to, here's a simple line of life; here's a small tribe of wives. Shaksp.
Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleveland.

5. Delineation; sketch.
You have generous thoughts turned to such speculations: but this is not enough towards the riding such buildings as I have drawn you here the lines of, unless the direction of all affairs here were wholly in your hands. Temple.

The inventors meant to turn such qualifications into persons as were agreeable to his character, from whom the line was drawn. Pope.

6. Contour; outline.
Oh lasting as those colours may they shine,
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line! Pope.

7. As much as is written from one margin to the other; a verse.
In the preceding line, Ulysses speaks of Naescas, yet immediately changes the words to the masculine gender. Broome.

In moving lines these few epistles tell
What fate attends the nymph who loves too well.
Garth.

8. Rank of soldiers.
They pierce the broken foe's remotest lines.
Addison.

From Auran eastward to the royal tow'rs
Of great Scelencia. Milton's Paradise Lost.

12. Equator; equinoctial circle.
When the sun below the line descends,
Then one long night continued darkness joins. Creech.

13. Progeny; family, ascending or descending.
He chid the sisters
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then prophet like,
They had'd him father to a line of Kings. Shaksp.

He sends you this most memorable line,
In ev'ry branch truly demonstrative,
Willing you overlook this pedigree. Shakspere.

Some lines were noted for a stern, rigid virtue,
Savage, haughty, partitionous and unpopular;
Others were sweet and affable. Dryden.

His empire, courage, and his boasted line,
Were all prov'd mortal. Roscommon.

A golden bowl
The queen commanded to be crown'd with wine,
The bowl that Belus us'd, and all the Tynan line. Dryden.

About his title, and hath sent for you
To line his enterprise. Shakspere.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, both of them rather courtiers, and affured to the state, than martial men; yet lined and assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience and valour. Bacon.

7. To impregnate: applied to animals generating.

Thus from the Tyrian pastures lin'd with Jove
He bore Europa, and still keeps his love. Creech.

LINEAGE. n. f. [linage, Fr.] Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending.

Both the lineage and the certain fire
From which I sprung, from me are hidden yet. Spenser.

Joseph was of the house and lineage of David. Lake.

The Tirlan cometh forth with all his generation or lineage, the males before him, and females following him; and if there be a woman from whose body

the whole lineage is descended, there is a traverse where the stretch. Bacon.

Men of mighty fame,
And from th' immortal gods their lineage came. Dry-

No longer shall the widow's land be so
A broken lineage, and a doubtful throne,
But boast her royal progeny's increase,
And count the pledges of her future peace. Addis.

This care was infused by God himself, in order to ascertain the descent of the Messiah, and to prove that he was, as the prophets had foretold, of the tribe of Judah, and of the lineage of David. Atterbury.

LINEAL. adj. [linealis, from linea, Lat.]

1. Composed of lines; delineated.

When any thing is mathematically demonstrated weak, it is much more mechanically weak; errors ever occurring more easily in the management of gross materials than lineal designs. Wotton.

2. Descending in a direct genealogy.

To be lineal, de facto, the right of their succession to paternal government, is to put a man in possession of that government which his fathers did enjoy, and he by lineal succession had a right to it. Locke.

3. Hereditary; derived from ancestors.

Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
Our just and lineal entrance to our own. Shaksp.

4. Allied by direct descent.

Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Erinegore. Shakspere.

O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd!
Well had I been depos'd if you had reign'd:
The father had descended for the son;
For only you are lineal to the throne. Dryden.

LINEALLY. adv. [from lineal.] In a direct line.

If he had been the person upon whom the crown had lineally and rightfully descended, it was a good law. Clarendon.

LINEAMENT. n. f. [lineament, Fr. linea- mentum, Lat.] Feature; discriminating mark in the form.

Noble York
Found that the issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father. Shakspere.

Six wings he wore, to shade
His lineaments divine. Milton.

Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine. Milton.

There are not more differences in men's faces, and the outward lineaments of their bodies, than there are in the makes and tempers of their minds; only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children. Locke.

I may advance religion and morals, by tracing some few lineaments in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both. Swift.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant: the lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction. Arbuthnot.

LINEAR. adj. [linearis, Lat.] Composed of lines; having the form of lines.

Wherever it is freed from the sand stone, it is covered with linear strata, tending towards several centers, so as to compose flat stellar figures. Woodward.

LINEATION. n. f. [lineatio, from linea,
Lat.] Draught of a line or lines.

There are in the lurney ground two white linea-
tions, with two of a pale red. Woodward.

LINEEN. n. f. [linum, Lat.] Cloth made of hemp or flax.

Here is a basket, he may creep in; throw soul
linen upon him, as if going to bucking. Shaksp.

Unseen, unseen, the fiery serpent aims
Between her linen and her naked limbs. Dryden.

LINEEN. adj. [lineus, Latin.]

1. Made of linen.

A linen sock on one leg, and a kersey boot hole on the other, gartered with a red and blue list. Shaksp.

2. Resembling linen.

L I N

Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face?
Shakespeare.

LINEN-DRA'PER. n. f. [linen and draper.]
He who deals in linen.

LING. n. f. [ling, Islandick.]

1. Heath. This sense is retained in the northern counties; yet Bacon seems to distinguish them.

Heath, and ling, and sedges. Bacon.

2. [linghe, Dutch.] A kind of sea fish.
When harvest is ended, take shipping, or ride,
Ling, salt fish, and herring, for Lent to provide.

Our English bring from thence good store of fish, but especially our deepest and thickest ling, which are therefore called island lings. Abbot.

LING. The termination notes commonly diminution; as, kitling, and is derived from klein, German, little: sometimes a quality; as, firstling, in which sense
Skinner deduces it from tangen, old Teutonic, to belong.

To LINGER. v. n. [from leng, Sax. long.]

1. To remain long in languor and pain.

Like wretches, that have linger'd long.

We'll snatch the strongest cordial of our love. Dry.

Better to rush at once to shades below,
Than linger life away, and nourish woe. Pope.

2. To hesitate; to be in suspense.

Perhaps thou ling'st, in deep thoughts detain'd

Of th' enterprise so hazardous and high.

Paradisi Regained.

3. To remain long. In an ill sense.

Let order die,

And let this world no longer be a stage

To feed contention in a ling'ring act. Shakespeare.

Ye brethren of the lyre, and tuneful voice,

Lament his lot; but at your own rejoice.

Now live secure, and linger out your days;

The gods are pleas'd alone with Purcell's lays. Dry.

Your very fear of death shall make ye try

To catch the shade of immortality;

Wishing on earth to linger, and to save

Part of its prey from the devouring grave. Prior.

4. To remain long without any action or determination.

We have lingered about a match between Anne

Pago and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer. Shakespeare.

5. To wait long in expectation or uncertainty.

I must solicit

All his concerns as mine:

And if my eyes have pow'r, he should not sue

In vain, nor linger with a long delay. Dryden.

6. To be long in producing effect.

Sho doth think, the hath strange ling'ring poisons.

Shakespeare.

To LINGER. v. a. To protract; to draw out to length. Out of use.

I can get no remedy against this consumption of the pulse. Purcell sing only lingers and lingers A,

out, but the disease is incurable. Shakespeare.

She ling is my desires. Shakespeare.

Let your brief plagues be mercy,

And linger not our fire destruction on. Shaksp.

LINGERER. n. f. [from linger.] One who lingers.

LINGERINGLY. adv. [from lingering.]

With delay; tardily.

Of poisons, some kill more gently and linger-

ingly, others more violently and speedily, yet

both kill. Hale.

LINGET. n. f. [from languet; lingot, Fr.]

A small mass of metal.

Other matter hath been used for money, as among the Lacedaemonians, iron linguets quenched with vinegar, that they may serve to no other use. Cand.

LINGO. n. f. [Portuguese.] Language;

tongue, speech. A low cant word.

I have thought to learn somewhat of your lingo, before I cross the seas. Cambray.

L I N

LINGUACIOUS. adj. [linguae, Lat.] Full of tongue; loquacious; talkative.

LINGUADENTAL. adj. [lingua and dens.

Lat.] Uttered by the joint action of the tongue and teeth.

The linguadentals, f. v., as also the linguadentals,

th. dh, he will soon learn. Holder.

LINGUIST. n. f. [from lingua, Lat.] A man skilful in languages.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wife in his mother dialect only. Milton.

Our linguist received extraordinary rudiments towards a good education. Spectator.

LINGWORT. n. f. An herb.

LINIMENT. n. f. [liniment, Fr. linimentum,

Lat.] Ointment; balsam; unguent.

The nostrils, and the jugular arteries, ought to be anointed every morning with this liniment or balsam. Harvey.

The wife author of nature hath provided on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment or liniment, fit for the innunction of the feathers. Ray.

LINING. n. f. [from line.]

1. The inner covering of any thing; the inner double of garment.

Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud

Turn forth her silver lining on the night? Milton.

The fold in the grille of the nose is covered with a lining, which differs from the facing of the tongue. Grew.

The gown with stiff embroid'ry shining,

Looks charming with a lighter lining. Prior.

2. That which is within.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our foldiers for these Irish wars. Shaksp.

LINK. n. f. [gelencke, German.]

1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on

The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs

Of more strong links of under, than can ever

Appear in your impediment. Shakespeare.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependance; you cannot draw one link without uttracting others. Glennville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,

Touching each link of the continued chain,

At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see

A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and clas'd together.

Make a link of hoise hair very strong, and fasten

it to the end of the hick that springs. Mortimer.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.

Nor nitless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.

I feel

The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh,

Bone of my bone thou art. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fire, wood and earth, and air, by this were bound,

And love, the common link, the new creation

crown'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination;

a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellec-

tive ratiocination is often long, and chained together

by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by sense attributed to brutes. Hale.

5. A series: this sense is improper. Addi- son has used link for chain.

Though I have here only chosen this single link of matters, I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive tradition. Addy.

L I N

6. [from Nym.] A torch made of pitch and hards.

O, thou art an exulting, bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies.

Howell.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,

Goodly and great he fails behind his link. Dryden.

One that bore a link

On a sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,

Like *link*stock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lampblack.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat. Shaksp.

To LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Defending tread us down,

Thus drooping; we with linked thunderbolts

Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton.

Against eating cares,

Lap me in soft Lydian airs;

Married to immortal verse,

Such as the meeting fold may pierce

In notes, with many a winding bout

Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so linked in friendship,

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter. Shakespeare.

3. To join; to connect.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,

Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke. Pope.

So from the first eternal order ran,

And creature link'd to creature, man to man.

Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in so near a bond. Hooker.

Be advised for the best,

Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band

Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. F. Queen.

Blood in princes link'd not in such fort,

As that it is of any pow'r to trye. Daniel.

5. To connect, as concomitant.

New hope to spring

Out of despair; joy, but with fear yet link'd.

Milton.

God has links our hopes and our duty together.

Decay of Piety.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we cut to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as it is sown, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker.

Tell me, which part it does necessitate?

I'll chuse the other: there I'll link th' effect;

A chain, which fools to catch themselves project!

Dryden.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

LINKBOY. n. f. [link and boy.] A boy

LINKMAN. } that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous disclusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy. More.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,

Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Guy.

In the black form of cinder-wench the came.

O may no linkboy interrupt their love! Guy.

LINKET. n. f. [linot, Fr. linaria, Lat.] A small singing bird.

The swallows make life ofcelandine, the throat of euphrasia, for the repairing of their sight. Morr.
Is it for thee this lincos pours his throat? Pope.
LINSEED. n. f. [semen lini, Lat.] The seed of flax, which is much used in medicine.

The joints may be closed with a cement of lincos, linseed oil, and cotton. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LINSEYWOOLSEY. adj. [linen and wool.] Made of linen and wool mixed; vile; mean; of different and unfavourable parts.

A lawless linsywoolsey brother, Jhudibros.

Half of one order, half another. Jhudibros.

Peel'd, patch'd and pyebald, linsywoolsey brothers, Pope.

Grave mummings! keeveless some, and shirlless others. Pope.

LINSTOCK. n. f. [lente or lente, Teutonic, lint and stock.] A staff of wood with a match at the end of it, used by gunners in firing cannon. Hanmer.

The nimble gunner

With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,

And down goes all before him. Shakespeare.

The distance judg'd for shot of ev'ry firm,

The linstocks touch, the ponderous ball expires. Dryden.

LINT. n. f. [linteum, Lat. lin, Welsh and Erse.]

1. The soft substance commonly called flax.

2. Linen scraped into soft woolly substance to lay on sores.

I dressed them up with unguentum basilici cum vitello ovi, upon pledges of lint. Wifeman.

LINTEL. n. f. [linéal, Fr.] That part of the door frame that lies cross the door posts over head.

Take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel and the two side-posts. Exodus.

When you lay any timber or brick work, as lintels over windows, lay them in loam, which is a great preserver of timber. Moron.

Silver the lintels deep projecting o'er,

And gold the ringlets that command the door. Pope.

LION. n. f. [lion, Fr. leo, Lat.]

1. The fiercest and most magnanimous of fourfooted beasts.

King Richard's surname was Cor-de-Lion, for his lion-like courage. Camden's Remains.

Be lion metted; proud, and take no care

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be. Shakespeare.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion.

Peachment on Drawing.

They rejoice

Each with their kind, lion with lions;

So fitly them in pairs thou hast combin'd. Milton.

See lion hearted Richard,

Piously valiant, like a torrent swell'd

With wintry tempests, that distains all mounds,

Breaking away impetuous, and involves

Within its sweep, trees, houses, men, he press'd,

Amidst the thickest battle. Philips.

1. A sign in the zodiac.

The lion for the honour of his skin,

The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shine

For aiding heaven, when giants dar'd to brave

The threat'ned stars. Creech's Manilius.

LIONESS. n. f. [feminine of lion.] A she lion.

Under which bush's shade, a lioness

Lay couching head on ground, with catlike watch,

When that the sleeping man should stir. Shakespeare.

The furious lioness,

Forgetting young ones, through the fields doth roar. Moy.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,

The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse. Dryden.

If we may believe Pliny, lions do, in a very severe manner, punish the adulteries of the lioness.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

LION'S-EAR. n. f. [leontopetalon, Lat.] A plant.

LION'S-MOUTH. n. f. [from lion.] The

LION'S-PAW. n. f. [from lion.] The

LION'S-TOOTH. n. f. [from lion.] The

LIP. n. f. [lippe, Saxon.]

1. The outer part of the mouth, the muscles that shoot beyond the teeth, which are of so much use in speaking, that they are used for all the organs of speech.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guests were in her eyes. Shakespeare.

No falsehood shall desire my lips with lies,

Or with a veil of truth disguise. Sandys.

Her lips blush deeper sweets. Thompson's Spring.

2. The edge of any thing.

In many places is a ridge of mountains some distance from the sea, and a plain from their roots, to the shore; which plain was formerly covered by the sea, which bounded against those hills as its first ramparts, or as the ledges or lips of its vessel. Burnet.

In wounds, the lips sink and are flaccid; a gleet followeth, and the flesh within withers. Wifeman.

3. To make a lip. To hang the lip in fullness and contempt.

A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician. Shakespeare.

To Lip. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss.

Obsolete.

A hand, that kings

Have lip, and trembled kissing. Shakespeare.

Oh! 'tis the fiend's arch mock,

To lip a wanton and suppose her chaste. Shakespeare.

LIP LABOUR. n. f. [lip and labour.] Action of the lips without concurrence of the mind; words without sentiments.

Fasting, when prayer is not directed to its own purposes, is but lip labour. Taylor.

LIPOTHYMOUS. adj. [λίπος and θυμός.] Swooning; fainting.

If the patient be surpris'd with a lipothymous languor, and great oppression about the stomach and hypochondria, expect no relief from cordials. Harris.

LIPOTHYMY. n. f. [λιποθυμία.] Swoon; fainting fit.

The scutators falling into a lipothymy, or deep swooning, made up this pageantry of death with a representing of it unto life. Taylor.

In lipothymy or swoonings, he used the figuration of this finger with saffron and gold. Brown.

LIPPED. adj. [from lip.] Having lips.

LIPPITUDE. n. f. [lippitude, Fr. lippitude, Lat.] Blearedness of eyes.

Diseases that are infectious are, such as are in the spirits and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body, such are pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

LIPWISDOM. n. f. [lip and wisdom.] Wisdom in talk without practice.

I find that all is but lipwisdom, which wants experience; I now, woe is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.

LIPQUABLE. adj. [from liquo, Lat.] Such as may be melted.

LIPQUATION. n. f. [from liquo, Lat.]

1. The act of melting.

2. Capacity to be melted.

The common opinion hath been, that crystal is nothing but ice and snow concentered, and, by duration of time, congealed beyond lipquation. Brown.

To Lipquate. v. n. [liquo, Lat.] To melt; to liquefy.

If the salts be not drawn forth before the clay is baked, they are apt to lipquate. Woodward.

LIQUEFACTION. n. f. [liquefactio, Lat. liquefaction, Fr.] The act of melting; the state of being melted.

Heat diffuses and makes bodies that keep in their spirits, in diverse liquefactions; and to such time as honey, which by age was so more liquid. Bacon's Natural History.

The burning of the earth will be a true liquefaction or dissolution of it, as to the exterior regions. Burnet.

LIQUEFIABLE. adj. [from liquefy.] Such as may be melted.

There are three causes of fixation, the even spreading of the spirits and tangible parts, the closeness of the tangible parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits; the two first may be joined with a nature liquefiable, the last not. Bacon.

To LIQUEFY. v. a. [liquefier, Fr. liquefacto, Lat.] To melt; to dissolve.

That degree of heat which is in lime and ashes, being a smothering heat, is the most proper, for it doth neither liquefy nor rarefy; and that is true maturation. Bacon's Natural History.

To LIQUEFY. v. n. To grow liquid.

The blood of St. Jannarius liquefied at the approach of the saint's head. Addison on Italy.

LIQUESCENCY. n. f. [liquefcentia, Lat.] Aptness to melt.

2. Soft; clear.

Her breast, the sugar'd nest

Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,

Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crahan.

3. Pronounced without any jar or harshness.

The many liquid consonants give a pleasing sound to the words, though they are all of one syllable. Dryden's Æneid.

Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay,

Lull with Amelia's liquid name the tune,

And sweetly flow through all the royal line. Pope.

4. Dissolved, so as not to be obtainable by law.

If a creditor should appeal to hinder the burial of his debtor's corpse, his appeal ought not to be received, since the business of burial requires a quick dispatch, though the debt be entirely liquid. Ayliffe.

LIQUID. n. f. Liquid substance; liquor.

Be it thy choice, when summer heats annoy,

To sit beneath her shady canopy,

Quaffing rich liquors. Philips.

To LIQUIDATE. v. a. [from liquid.] To clear away; to lessen debts.

LIQUIDITY. n. f. [from liquid.] Subtlety; thinness.

The spirits, for their liquidity, are more incapable than the fluid medium, which is the conveyor of sounds, to persevere in the continued repetition of vocal airs. Glenville.

LIQUIDNESS. n. f. [from liquid.] Quality of being liquid; fluency.

Oil of anniseeds, in a cool place, thickened into the consistence of white butter, which with the least heat, resumed its former liquidity. Boyle.

LIQUOR. n. f. [liquor, Lat. liqueur, Fr.]

1. Any thing liquid: it is commonly used of fluids inebriating, or impregnated with something, or made by decoction.

Nor envy'd them the grape

Whose heads that turbulent liquor fills with fumes. Milton.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor pour'd into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons. South's Sermons.

2. Strong drink: in familiar language.

To LIQUOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To drench or moisten.

Capt wheels squeak hot when they are liquored. Bacon.

By freeing the precipitated matter from the rest by litters, and diligently grinding the white

They're like a foul misshapen figure,
Mark'd by the deficiencies to be avoided.
As venous roads, or liars' dreadful fangs.
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting.
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing. Shakespeare.

LO'ARDSTONE, n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

LO'ARDSTAFF, n. f. A plant.

LO'ARDSTAFF, doctor. A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo, interj. [In Sax.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recal' the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakespeare.
Now must the world point at poor Catherine,
And thy, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife. Shakespeare.

Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh. Shakespeare.

Thou dost utter,
I am yours for ever.

Why to you now, I've spoke to the purpose.
Shakespeare.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth.
Rajkommen.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine
To bless our bold design. Dryden's Albion.

LOACH, n. f. [Loche, Fr.]
The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is fittable to that length; he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gelsner, and other physicians, recommended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel. Watson's Angler.

LOAD, n. f. [blabe, Sax.]

1. A burden; a freight; lading.
A fair plant with fruit furching'd,
Deigns gone to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet. Milton.

Then on his back he laid the precious load.
And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden.
Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree;
White by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which these trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.
Jove lighten'd of its load.

Th' enormous mass, the labour of a god. Pope.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.
Like lion mor'd they laid on load,
And made a cruel fight. Cherry Chase.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm. Milton.

And Macbeth laid hard load upon his helm.
Dryden.

4. Any thing that depresses.
How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind
under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray.

5. As much drink as one can bear.
There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

The thundering god,
Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryden.

To LOAD, v. a. preterit loaded; par. loaden or laden. [hlaban, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.
At last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shakespeare.

Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the land. Shakespeare.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Lea.

3. To charge a gun.
A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading
it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifeman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.
Thy dreadful vow, laden with death, still sounds
In my tun'd ears. Addison's Cato.

LOAD, n. f. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written; from leban, Sax. to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strikes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew.

LO'ADER, n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LO'ADSMAN, n. f. [load or lode and man.]
He who leads the way; a pilot.

LO'ADSTAR, n. f. [more properly as it is in Manderville, lodestar, from leban, to lead.] The polestar, theynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes: she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.

O happy star!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!
More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Shakespeare.

That clear majesty
Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth, Lodestone to hearts, and lodestar to all eyes. Dantes.

LO'ADSTONE, n. f. [properly lodestone or lodging-stone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron gray where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour; it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of attracting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF, n. f. [from hlaf or laf, Sax.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Early it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakespeare.

The bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days, hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a-day. Hayward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.
Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle
it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mort.

LOAM, n. f. [*lim, laam, Sax. limus, Lat.
from lym, a fen, Junius.*] Fat, unctuous, tenacious earth; marl.

The priest treasure
Is spotless reputation; that away.
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shakespeare.

Alexander returneth to dust: the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a leger barrel? Shakespeare.

To LOAM, v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.
The joint ends and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the moists. Milton.

LOAMY, adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding. Beacon.

Auncula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded.  Evelyn.

LOAN, n. f. [hlant, Sax.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be paid,
the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteen,
and loans. Beacon.

You're on the fret;
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,
Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dryden.

LOATH, adj. [lað, Sax.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.
These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes; half loth to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wife,
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of prince's worthy. Spenser.

When he heard her answers loth he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distress. Spenser.

To speak so indirectly, I am loth;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part. Shakespeare.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,
From whose soft side she first doth issue make;
She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,
Her slow'ry banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both.
Laying up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Aeneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shows him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature. Dryden.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,
First views the torrent he would venture o'er;
And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and loth to go round:
Then dipping in his staff doth trial make How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dryden.

I know you thy to be oblig'd;
And still more loth to be oblig'd by me. Southerne.

To LOATH, v. a. [from loath.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.
Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath. Waller.

For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood. Dryden.

Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and cloathes. Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.
Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long'd for bread. Cowley.

Our appetite is extinguish'd with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Hogers.

3. To feel food with dislike.
Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHE, v. n.

1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence.
Obsolete.
Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The gristy toadfoot grown there might I see,
And loathing paddocks lording on the same. Spenser.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.
The fish in the river shall die, and the river sink; and the Egyptians shall loath to drink of the water. Ezekiel.

Why do I loath within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes? Ross.

LOATHEN. n. f. [from loath.] One that loathes.

LOATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.
Which he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure. Hamlet.

2. Abhorred; hated.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven fly. Spenser.

LOATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LOATHLY. adj. [from loath.] Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.

An huge great dragon, horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
With murderous ravins. Spenser.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakespeare.

LOATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.

Loathly opposite I stood

To his unnatural purpose. Shakespeare.

This shows that you from nature loathly tray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LOATHWESS. n. f. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shakespeare.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathness to depart would grow. Shakespeare.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loathness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon.

LOATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject his desire
To loathsomeness sloth, or hours in ease to waste.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsomeness sickness. Milton.

If we consider mine in such a loathsomeness and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being? South.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey
Is loathsomeness in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakespeare.

LOATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from loathsomeness.]

Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The catcombs must have been full of flesh and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odors till a feast was past. Bacon.

LOB. n. f.

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.

Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll begone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Shakespeare.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.

Crowd, whom in jans bound,
Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.

3. A big return.

For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the branding, are the chief.
Watson.

To lob. v. s. To fall in a slovenly or lasy manner.

The business of his sword lobbed his
Vol. II.

And their path led Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips.
Shakespeare.

LOBBY. n. f. [lobbe, German.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whiff'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Watson.

Try your backstairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stratagem in war is no deceit. King.

LOBE. n. f. [lobe, Fr. lobes.] A division; a distinct part: used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbutnot.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Swett.

LOBSTER. n. f. [lobstee, Sax.] A crus-taceous fish.

Those that cast their skull, are the lobster, the crab, and craw fish. Bacon.

It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other. Brown.

LOCAL. adj. [local, Fr. locus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed. Stillington.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their fight,
As of a duel, or of the local wounds
Of head, or heel. Milton.

How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum,
without a change in the body moved? Digby.

LOCALITY. n. f. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned.

LOCALLY. adv. [from local.] With respect to place.

Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers. Glanville.

LOCATION. n. f. [locatio, Lat.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing;
state of being placed.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

LOCUS. n. f. A lake. Scottish.

A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a sinking puddle. Cheyne.

LOCK. n. f. [loc, Sax. in both senses.]

1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.

No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
But with that piercing noise flew open quit or brast.

We have locks, to safeguard secretaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. Shakespeare.

And these are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their works of guards. Motow.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.

A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder, a little before the lock, another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock. Cress.

3. A hug; a grapple.

They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton.

4. Any enclosure.

Sergeant, eager with his beak to peck
Betwixt the rival galley and the rock,
Shuts up the unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden.

5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.

Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten. Sidney.

A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemeth she looked into it, and dressed her green locks by that running river. Sidney.

His grizly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Spenser.

The bottom was set against a lock of wool, and the found was quite dead. Bacon.

They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads. Sandys.

A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope.

Behold the locks that are grown white
Beneath a helmet in your father's battles. Addison.

Two locks that graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well-connid, to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

6. A tuft.

I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or furling to a lock of hay. Addison.

To LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with locks.

The garden, fasted on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
Thought all secure. Dryden.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.

I am locked in one of them;
If you do love me, you will find me out. Shakespeare.

Our former sample in our strong-barr'd gates,
Then seek to know those things which make us blest, Shakespeare.

And having found them, lock them in thy breast. Denham.

The frightened dame

The dog in secret lock'd. Dryden's Ode.

If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out,
the freedom of those within is infringed, and all their acts are as void as if they were locked in. Bay.

One conductor to the poet's completing of his work; the other locks his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle. Dryden.

The father of the gods
Cupid's their fury to thy dark abodes,
And lock'd 'em late with locks, oppress'd with locks. Dryden.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less? Locke.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your loose places, for fear the mice may find it and break them. Bay.

Your wine lock'd up,
Plain milk will do the feat. Pope.

3. To close fast.

Booth blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes.

To LOCK. v. n.

1. To become fast by a lock.

For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,
Doubly disparted it did lock and close,
That when it locked, none might through it pass. Spenser.

2. To unite by mutual interfection.

Either they lock into each other, or slip and spin another's surface; as much of their surface touches as make them cohere. B. ut.

LOCKER, n. f. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.
 I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat. Robinson Crusoe.

LOCKET, n. f. [loquet, Fr.] A small lock; any catch or spring to fasten a necklace, or other ornament.

Where knights are kept in narrow lists,
 With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists. Hudibras.
ЛОККАМ, n. f. A sort of coarse linen. Huemer.

The kitchen malkin pins
 Her richest lockram about her teaky neck, Clambering the walls to use him. Shakespeare.

ЛОККАС, n. f. A kind of ranunculus.

LOCOMOTION, n. f. [locus and motus, Lat.] Power of changing place.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet. Brown.

LOCOMOTIVE, adj. [locus and moveo, Lat.] Changing place; having the power of removing or changing place.

I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham.

In the night too oft he kicks,
 Or shows his locomotive tricks. Prior.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular, organized part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks. A. b. thout.

ЛОКУСТ, n. f. [locusta, Lat.] A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known amongst us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia, that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned, but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Calmat.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy count. Probus.

Air replete with the steams of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers, such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts. A. b.

LOQUST-TREE, n. f.
 The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an uncapfular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungus stringy substance. Miller.

ЛОДСТАР. See LOADSTAR.

ЛОДСТОНЕ. See LOADSTONE.

TO LODGE, v. a. [logia, Sax. loder, Fr.]

1. To place in a temporary habitation.
 When he was come to the court of France, the king staid him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him, and accommodated him, in great state. Bacon.

2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.
 My house was proud to lodge a knight. Dry.

3. To place; to plant.
 When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
 And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear,
 The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
 And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Otway.

He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast,
 That had so often to his own been prest. Addison.
 In viewing again the ideas that are lodged in the memory, the mind is more than passive. Locke.

4. To fix; to settle.
 By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
 And by whose power I well might lodge a tear
 To be again displac'd. Shakespeare.

I can give no reason,
 More than a lodg'd bite, and a certain loathing
 I bear Antonio. Shakespeare.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodg'd it, and noted it, in some particular. Bacon.

6. To harbour or cover.
 The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert;
 Rush in at once. Addison.

7. To afford place to.
 The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne.

8. To lay flat.
 Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down;
 Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakespeare.

We'll make foul weather with despided tears;
 Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
 And make a dearth in this revolting land. Shak.

TO LODGE, v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.
 Core keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
 And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie. Shak.

Something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air
 To testify his hidden residence. Milton.

And dwells such rage in softest bosoms then?
 And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king,
 That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
 While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shak.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here or he lies there, were to be in mine own throat. Shakespeare.

Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.
 My lords
 And soldiers, stay and lodge with me this night. Shakespeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness, a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I may leave my people! Jeremiah.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be affected, because thou hast a convenient inn to lodge in by the way. Taylor.

4. To lie flat.
 Long come wheast they reckon in Oxfordshire hell for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be milled. Motimes.

LODGE, n. f. [logis, French.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.
 He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges. Sidney.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakespeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
 Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shak.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both flood,
 Both turn'd, and under open sky adon'd
 The God that made both sky, air, earth. Milton.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge depends upon a low-spirited family. Sieff.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater;
 as, the porter's lodge.

ЛОДЖМЕНТ, n. f. [from lodge; logement, French.]

1. Disposition or collocation in a certain place.
 The curious lodgement and inoculation of the auditory nerves. Derham.

2. Accumulation; collection.
 An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter. Sharp's Surgery.

3. Possession of the enemy's work.
 The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other. Addison.

ЛОДЖЕР, n. f. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now, I scorn
 the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. Shakespeare.

There were in a family, the men and his wife,
 three children, and three servants or lodgers. Granant's Bills.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families. Harvey.

The gentlewoman begged me to stop; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad. Tatler.

Sylla was reproached by his tallow lodger that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and fivepence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. Arbutnot.

2. One that resides in any place.
 Look in that breast, most dirty dear;
 Say, can you find but one such lodger there? Pope.

ЛОДЖИНГ, n. f. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.
 I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
 And let him find it. Shakespeare's Othello.

Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great aduantage of acquaintance. Bacon.

At night he came
 To his known lodgings, and his country dame. Dryden.

He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. Addison's Guardian.

Wits take lodgings in the found of Bow. Pope.

2. Place of residence.
 Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,
 The nest of love, the lodging of delight,
 The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure,
 The sacred harbour of that heavenly flight. Spem.

3. Harbour; covert.
 The hounds were uncoupled; and the flag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

4. Convenience to sleep on.
 Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding as soft and warm lodging. Ray.

ЛОФТ, n. f. [loft, Welsh; or from lift.]

1. A floor.
 Enty thus fell down from the third loft. Acts.

There is a traveller placed in a loft above. Bac.

2. The highest floor.
 To tell him in a lumber loft,
 A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
 And ever drizzling rain upon the loft,
 Mixt with a murmuring wind. Spenser.

3. Rooms on high.
 Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
 And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder. Milton.

A weasel once made shift to sink
 In at a corn loft, through a chink. Pope.

ЛОФТЛИ, adv. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place.

2. Proudly; haughtily.
 They speak wickedly concerning oppression:
 they speak loftily. Psalms.

3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.
 My lowly verse may loftily arise,
 And lift itself unto the highest skies. Spenser.

ЛОФТИНЕС, n. f. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation.

2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.
 Three poets in three distant ages born;
 The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
 The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness.
 Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Cotlier.

ЛОФТЫ, adj. [from loft, or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.
 Cities of men with lofty gates and towers. Milt.

See lofty Lebanon his head advance.
 See nothing forgets on the mountains dance. Pope.

2. Elevated in condition or character.
 Thus saith the high and lofty One. Isaiah.

3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.

He know himself to brag and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.
Proud; haughty.

The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled. Isiah.
Lofty and four to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that fought him, sweet as summer.

Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden.

LOG, n. s. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lizzu, Sax. to lie; Junius, from longe, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin, lignum, is the true original.]

1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.
Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt ungod'd to pile.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swim,
An udder's dunt, which rudely cut within,

And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cub, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin.

A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

LOGARITHMS, n. s. [logarithme, French; λογος and ἀριθμος.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, a civilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, to the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical
one, for instance,

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256

Where the numbers above, beginning with (1), and arithmetically proportioned, are called logarithms.
The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by deducting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and inflecting them for the cube, and so on.

LOGGERS, n. s.

Loggers is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the game which is now called kittle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggers with them.

LOGGERHEAD, n. s. [logge, Dut. stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt;
a blockhead; a thickskull.

Where hast thou been, Hal?

—With three or four loggerheads, amongst three four score hogheads. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires? Flower.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS, } fight without weapons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell so loggerheads which should be his master. L'Isle.

LOGGERHEADEN, adj. [from loggerhead.]
Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerheaded unpollish'd groom, what!
no attendance? Shakespeare.

O'GICK, n. s. [logique, Fr. logica, Lat.

from λογος, the art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Wotton's Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound,
There slapt fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground.

Pope.

LOGICAL, adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.

The heretic complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hood.

Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical argument; since it would be more perfection not to want them.

2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head.

LOGICALLY, adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?

From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either.

LOGICIAN, n. s. [logicien, Fr. logiciens, Lat.] A teacher or professor of logick;
a man versed in logick.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great things.

It may be believed that logicians, men is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter.

Each staunch polemic stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician full expelling Locke,

Came whip and spur Pope's Dunciad

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception.

The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author.

LOGMAN, n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your lake
Am I this patient logman. Shakespeare's Tempest.

LOGOMACHY, n. s. [λογμαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities, and to transformed her to a mere kind of sophistry and logomachy.

LOGWOOD, n. s.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campechy.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water.

LOGGERS, n. s.

Logick is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called eclegmas, ambivives, or incutives.

Logicks and pectorals were prescribed, and veneration repeated.

LOGS, n. s. [lagn, Welsh.]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

2. Loins; the reins.

My face I'll guine with silk, Blanket my loins. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Thou blunder of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou lashed jive of thy father's loins!

High in the love of Heaven? yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son Of God most high.

A multitude like which the populous north Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south.

To LOITER, v. n. [luter, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

So John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries.

Wherever this long delay?
You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away.

Mark how he spends his time, whether he un-actively loiters it away.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity.

LOITERER, n. s. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a larger to cry;
And daily to loiters have a good eye.

The poor, by idleness or indolence, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiters.

Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?
Though my eyes close'd, my arms have still been open'd.

To search it thou wert come.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our indolence, that we live not like idle
loiters and truants.

Each loiterer, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.

To LOLL, v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me's to shakes and pulls me.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation.

Cloze by a softly murm'ring stream,
Where lovers us'd to loll and dream.

To loll on cushions, rich with citron sced,
And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

Vind of care he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his business to be done by fate.

But wanton now, and lolling at our ease,
We suffer all the miserate ills of peace.

A lazy, lolling fort
Of ever listless loiters.

2. To hang out: used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian loll,
With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet.

With harmless play amidst the bows he lolls it,
And with his lolling tongue assu'd the taste.

To LOLL, v. a. To put out: used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hast thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when they play among the loles,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll out a foot.

By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs, Fierce tigers couch'd around; and loll'd their fawning tongues.

LOMP, n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LONE, adj. [contracted from alone.]
1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Here the lone hour a blank of life displays, Savage.

L O N

Thus vanish foggy, gnomes, and balls,
And leave you in fine woods, or empty walls. Pope.
2. Single; not conjoined or neighbouring to others.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

LO'NELINESS. n. f. [from lonely.]

1. Solitude; want of company.

The huge and fearful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody since Duiphimus was lost. Stidney.

2. Disposition to solitude.

I like

The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears head. Shakespeare.

LO'NELY. adj. [from lone.]

1. Solitary.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shaksp.

Why thus dost thou up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the miled and lonely traveller? Milton.

Time has made you sate, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell. Dryden.

2. Addicted to solitude.

When, sweet prince,

You lonely thus from the full court retire,
Love and the graces follow to your solitude. Rome.

LO'NNESS. n. f. [from lone.] Solitude;
dislike of company.

If of court life you know the good,

You would leave loneliness. Donne.
I can love her who loves loneliness best. Donne.

LO'NOME. adj. [from lone.] Solitary; distant.

You either must the earth from rest distrust,
Or roll around the heavens the solar orb,
Else what a dreadful face will nature wear?
How horrid will these loneliness fests appear! Blackm.

LO'NO. adj. [long, Fr. longue, Lat.]

1. Not short: used of time.

He talk'd a long while, even till break of day. Act.
He was desirous to see him of a long season. Luke.

2. Not short: used of space.

Empress, the way is ready, and not long. Milt.

3. Having one of its geometrical dimensions in a greater degree than either of the other.

His branches because long because of the waters. Isaiah.

We made the trial in a long neck'd phial left open at the top. Boyle.

4. Of any certain measure in length.

Women eat their children of a span long. Lam.
These, as a line, their long dimensions drew,
Stretching the ground with fume trace. Milton.

The fig-tree spreads her arms,
Branching to broad and long. Milton.

A pond'rous mace,
Full twenty cubits long, he swings around. Pope.

5. Not soon ceasing, or at an end.

Man goeth to his long home. Ecclesiastes.
Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land. Exodus.

They open to themselves at length a way
Up hither, under long obedience try'd. Milton.

Him after long debate of thoughts reveal'd
Irresolute, his final sentence chose. Milton.

Long and careless this. Milton.

6. Dilatory.

Death will not be long in coming, and the cover-ment of the grave is not shew'd unto thee. Ecclus.

7. Tedious in narration.

Chief men try to defeat,

With long and tedious havoc, fabled knights. Milton.

Reduce, my muse, the wond'ring song,
A tale should never be too long. Prior.

8. Continued by succession to a great series.

But first a long succession must arise. Milton.

9. [from the verb. To long.] Longing; desire: or perhaps long continued,

L O N

from the disposition to continue looking at any thing desired.

Praying for him, and casting a long look that way, he saw the gilly leave the portul. Shaksp.

By every circumstance I know he loves;
Yet he but doubts, and parries, and casts out
Many a long look for succour. Dryden.

10. [In music and pronunciation.] Protracted: as, a long note; a long syllable.

LONG. adv.

1. To a great length in space.

The marble brought, erected the spacious dome,
Or form the pillars long-extended rows,
On which the planted grove and pensile garden grows. Prior.

2. Not for a short time.

With mighty barres of long-enduring brafs.
Fairfax.

When the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount. Exodus.

The martial Ancus Forbids the rusty sword again. Dryden.

Reina'd the long-forgotten shield.
One of these advantages, which Corneille has laid down, is the making choice of some signal and long-expected day, whereon the action of the play is to depend. Dryden.

So stood the pious prince immov'd, and long Sustain'd the madness of the noisy throng. Dryd.

The muse resumes her long-forgotten lays,
And love, restor'd, his ancient realm surveys. Dryden.

No man has complained that you have discounted too long on any subject, for you leave us in an eagerness of learning more. Dryden.

Persia left for you
The realm of Candahar for dow'r I brought,
That long-contended prize for which you fought. Dryden.

It may help to put an end to that long-aggitated and unreasonable question, whether man's will be free or no? Locke.

Heav'n restores
To thy fond with the long-expected shore. Pope.

3. In the comparative, it signifies for more time; and in the superlative, for most time.

When she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes. Exodus.

Elders parents signifies either the eldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had mine. Locke.

4. Not soon.

Not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind. Acts.

5. At a point of duration far distant.

If the world had been eternal, those would have been found in it, and generally spread long ago, and beyond the memory of all ages. Tillotson.

Say, that you once were virtuous long ago?
A frugal, hardy people. Philop's Britain.

6. [for along; au long, Fr.] All along;
throughout: of time.

There sat a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. F. Queen.

Some say, that ever 'gaunt that fensom comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, no witch hath power to charm,
No hallow'd and to gracious is the time. Shaksp.

He fed me all my life long to this day. Genesis.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

LONG. adv. [gelang, a fault, Sax.] By the fault; by the failure. A word now out of use, but truly English.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pains and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker.

Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Shaksp.

Address all this call, long of you. Shaksp.

L O N

If we were to him that we know so much, it is perhaps long of his fond address that we know so little more. Glanville.

TO LONG. v. n. [gelangen, German, to ask.
Shaksp.] To desire earnestly; to wish with eagerness continued: with for or after before the thing desired.

Fresh expectation troubled not the land
With any long'd for change, or better state. Shaksp.

And thine eyes shall look, and sail with longing for them. Deuteronomy.

If erst he wished, now he longed sore. Fairfax.

The great master perceived, that Rhodes was the place the Turkish tyrant longed after. Knollys.

If the report be good, it causeth love,
And longing hope, and well assured joy. Darics.

His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death deserv'd. Dryden's Æneid.

Glad of the gift, the new-made warrior goes,
And arms among the Greeks, and longs for equal foes. Dryden.

Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality? Addison's Cato.

There's the tie that binds you;
You long to call him father: Maria's charms
Work in your heart unseen, and plead for Cato. Addison.

Nicomedes longing for herrings, was supplied with fresh ones by his cook, at a great distance from the sea. Abulchir.

Through stormy seas
I counted dangers, and long'd for death. A. Philips.

LONGANIMITY. n. f. [longanimitas, Lat.
longanimitt, Fr.] Forbearance; patience of offenders.

It had overcome the patience of Job, as it did the meekness of Moses, and surely had mastered any but the longanimity and lasting forbearance of God. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That innocent and holy nation had rather go clad in the snowy white robes of meekness and longanimity, than in the purple mantle of blood.
Hovel's England's Tears.

LONGBOAT. n. f. The largest boat belonging to a ship.

At the first descent on shore, he did countenance
the landing in his longboat. Wotton.

They first betray their masters, and then, when they find the vessel sinking, save themselves in the longboat. L'Etranger.

LONGEVITY. n. f. [longevus, Latin.]

Length of life.

That those are countries suitable to the nature of man, and convenient to live in, appears from the longevity of the natives. Ray on Creation.

The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the aboriginals. Arbuthnot on Atoms.

LONGIMANOUS. adj. [longimanus, Fr. longimanus, Lat.] Longhanded; having long hands.

The villainy of this Christian exceeded the persecution of heathens, whose malice was never to longimaneous us to reach the soul of their enemies, or to extend unto the exile of their citysmen. Brown.

LONGIMETRY. n. f. [longus and metria;
longimetric, Fr.] The art or practice of measuring distances.

Our two eyes are like two different stations in longimetry, by the distance of which the distance between two objects is measured. Cheyne.

LONGING. n. f. [from long.] Earnest defire; continual wish.

When within short time I came to the degree of uncertain wishes, and that those wishes grew to un-quiet longings, when I would fix my thoughts upon nothing, but that within little varying they should end with Philoclea. Stidney.

I have a woman's longing.

An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in the weeds of peace. Shaksp.

The will is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those unquietnesses which it then feels in its wants of, and longings after them. Locke.

LONGEVITY. adv. [from longing.] With incessant wishes.

To his first bias longing to be hant.

And rather would be great by wicked means. Dryd.

LONGISH. adj. [from long.] Somewhat long.

LONGITUDE. n. f. [longitude, Fr. longitudo, Lat.]

1. Length; the greatest dimension.

The ancients did determine the longitude of all rooms, which were longer than broad, by the double of their latitude.

The variety of the alphabet was in mere longitude only; but the thousand parts of our bodies may be diversified by situation in all the dimensions of solid bodies; which multiplies all over and over again, and overwhelms the fancy in a new abyss of unfathomable number.

This universal gravitation is an incessant and uniform action by certain and established laws, according to quantity of matter and longitude of distance, that it cannot be destroyed or impaired.

2. The circumference of the earth measured from any meridian.

Some of Magellan's company were the first that did compass the world through all the degrees of longitude.

3. The distance of any part of the earth to the east or west of any place.

To conclude;
Of longitudes, what other way have we,
But to mark when and where the dark eclipses be?

His was the method of discovering the longitude by bomb vessels.

4. The position of any thing to east or west.

The longitude of a star is its distance from the first point of numeration towards the east, which first point, unto the ancients, was the vernal equinox.

LONGITUDINAL. adj. [from longitude; longitudinal, French.] Measured by the length; running in the longest direction.

Longitudinal is opposed to transverse; these vessels are dilated, and their longitudinal diameters straitened, and so the length of the whole muscle shortened.

LONGLY. adv. [from long.] Longingly; with great liking.

Master, you look'd to longly on the maid,
Perhaps, you mark not what's the pith of all.

LONGSOME. adj. [from long.] Tediums; wearisome by its length.

They found the war to churlish and longsome, as they grew then to a resolution, that, as long as England stood in state to succour those countries, they should but consume themselves in an endless war.

When chill'd by adverse snows, and beating rain,
We tread with wearied steps the longsome plain.

LONGSUFFERING. adj. [from long and suffering.] Patient; not easily provoked.

The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness.

LONGSUFFERING. n. f. Patience of offence; clemency.

We infer from the mercy and longsuffering of God, that they were themselves sufficiently secure of his favour.

LONGTAIL. n. f. [from long and tail.] Cut and longtail: a canting term for one or another. A phrase, I believe, taken from dogs, which belonging to men not qualified to hunt, had their tails cut.

He will maintain you like a gentleman.
—Aye, that I will come cut and longtail under the degree of a figure.

LONGWAYS. adv. [This and many other words to be terminated are corrupted from wise.] In the longitudinal direction.

LONGWIND. n. f. A long wind, which lies long, and is a great hindrance to ships.

LONGWIND. adj. [from long and wind.] Long-breathed; tedious.

My simile you minded,
Which, I confess, is too longwinded.

LONGWISE. adv. [from long and wise.] In the longitudinal direction.

They make a little cross of a quill, longwise of that part of the quill which hath the pith, and crosswise of that piece of the quill without pith.

He was laid upon two beds, the one joined longwise unto the other, both which he filled with his length.

LOO. n. f. A game at cards.

A secret indignation, that all those affectionate of the mind should be thus vilely thrown away upon a hand at loo.

In the sights of loo.

LOOBILY. adj. [looby and like.] Awkward; clumsily.

The plot of the farce was a grammar school, the master letting his boys their lessons, and a loobily country fellow putting in for a part among the scholars.

LOOBY. n. f. [Of this word the derivation is unsettled. Skinner mentions lapp, German, foolish; and Junius, llabe, a clown, Welsh, which seems to be the true original, unless it come from loh.] A lubber; a clumsy clown.

The vices trace
From the father's scoundrel race.
Who could give the looby such airs?

LOOF. n. f. That part aloft of the ship which lies just before the cheste-trees, as far as the bulkhead of the castle. Sea Dict.

TO LOOF. v. a. To bring the ship close to a wind.

LOOFED. adj. [from aloof.] Gone to a distance.

She once being loof, Anthony Claps on his sea-wing, like a doating mallard, Leaving the fight.

TO LOOK. v. n. [locan, Sax.]

1. To direct the eye to or from any object: when the present object is mentioned, the preposition after look is either on or at; if it is absent, we use for; if distant, after: to was sometimes used anciently for at.

Your queen died, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now.

The gods look down, and the unnatural scene
They laugh at.

Samuel looked out at a window, and saw Isaac.

Mine inquiries have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up.

He was ruddy, and of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to.

The fathers shall not look back to their children.

He had looked round about on them with anger.

The state would call the eye, and look about to see whether there were any head under whom it might unite.

Fine devices of arching water without spilling, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health.

Frith appears white, whether the sun be in the meridian, or any where between it and the horizon, and from what place soever the beholders look upon it.

They'll rather wait the running of the river dry, than take pains to look about for a bridge.

Thus pond'ring, he looked under with his eyes,
And saw the woman's tears.

Bertran; if thou dar'st look out
Upon yon slaughter'd host,

Look on thy face, and now he looks a god.

LOOK. v. n. To direct the eye to or from any object: when the present object is mentioned, the preposition after look is either on or at; if it is absent, we use for; if distant, after: to was sometimes used anciently for at.

two spots: they breed in Farr Island. Grew.

LOOM. n. f. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word loam.] A sorry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.

Thou cream-fac'd loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look? Shakspere.

The false loon, who could not work his will
By open force, employ'd his flatter skill:

I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend;
Are you afraid of me that are your friend? Dryd.

This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or, as the Scots call it, a false loon of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades. Arbuthnot.

LOOP. n. f. [from loopen, Dutch; to run.]

A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.

Nor any skill'd in loops of sing'ring fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this, so curious network, to compare. Spenser.

Make me to see't, or at least to prove it,
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on. Shakspere.

Bind our crooked legs in hoops
Made of shells, with silver loops. Ben Jonson.

An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, dockets, and loops. Addison.

LOOPEN. adj. [from loop.] Full of holes.

Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bid'd the pelting of this pitiless storm?
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and winnow'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shakspere.

LOOPHOLE. n. f. [loop and hole.]

there are hundred eyes planted in every loophole that go off at the twinkling of an eye. Dryden.

LOOPHOLE. n. f. [from loop and hole.]

Full of holes; full of openings, or void spaces.

This uneasy loophole'd goal,
In which y' are hamper'd by the festlock,
Cannot but put y' in the midst of wedlock. Hudib.

LOORD. n. f. [loerd, Dutch; lourant,

French; lurdas, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trecoeur derives lourdant from Loerde or Lourde, a village in Gascony, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they.
But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gas-cons are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes re-proachful heaviness, or stupid laziness.— Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord;
and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e.
lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm; that if it for-tuned a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw a Dane set foot upon the same,
he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppress'd, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dulness rather than magiserial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.

Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
And rekes much of thy swinke,
That with fond terms and witless words
To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser.

TO LOOSE. v. a. [lejan, Saxon.]

1. To unbind; to untie any thing fastened.

The shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose. Acte.

Can'st thou loose the bands of Orion?
Who is worthy to loose the fens thereof? Rev.
This is to cut the knot when we cannot loose it. Burnet.

6. To free from any thing that shackles the mind.

Lest to the pastor owes than to himself. Dryden.

7. To free from any thing painful.

Woman, thou art loos'd from thy infirmity. Luke.

8. To disengage.

When heart was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again. Dryden.

Then sprung the forth, they follow'd her again.

TO LOOSE. v. a. To depart by loosing the anchor.

Ye should have hearkened, and not have loost from Ocre. Abbt.

The emperor loosing from Barcelona, came to the port of Mago, in the island of Minorca. Knoles.

Loosing thence by night, they were driven by contrary winds back into this port. Raleigh.

LOOSE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unbound; untied.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife,
I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspere.

Lo! I see four men loose walking. Daniel.

2. Not fast; not fixed.

Those few that clust'rd might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet by the neat cousist might be separated again, and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, though without ever cohering into the bodies of planets. Bentley.

3. Not tight; as, a loose robe.

4. Not crowded; not close.

With extended wings a host might pass,
With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array. Milton.

5. Wanton; not chaste.

Fair Venus seem'd unto his bed to bring
Her, whom he waking evermore did ween
To be the chafest flower that ay did spring:
On earthly branch, the daughter of a king
Now a loose leman to vile service bound. Queen.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents who sleepily denies. Dryden.

6. Not close; not concise; lax.

If an author be loose and diffuse in his style, the translator needs only regard the propriety of the language. Felton.

7. Vague; indeterminate; not accurate.

It is but a loose thing to speak of possibilities, without the particular designs; so is it to speak of lawfulness, without the particular cases. Bacon.

It seems unaccountable to be so exact in the quantity of liquor where a small error was of little concern, and to be so loose in the doses of powerful medicines. Arbuthnot.

8. Not strict; not rigid.

Because conscience, and the fear of deserving from that which is right, maketh them diligent observers of circumstances, the loose regard whereof is the nurse of vulgar folly. Hooker.

9. Unconnected; rambling.

I dare venture nothing without a strict examina-salted? Matthew.

5. To possess no longer: contrary to keep.
They have lost the trade of woollen drapery.

No youth shall equal hopes of glory give,
The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost. Dryd.

We should never lose sight of the country, though sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it. Addison.

6. To miss, so as not to find.
Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her favourite dove. Prior.

7. To separate or alienate. It is perhaps in this sense always used passively, with to before that from which the separation is made.

But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bowl shall flow, my stocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove. Pope.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

8. To ruin; to send to perdition.
In spite of all the virtue we can boast,
The woman that deliberates is lost. Addison.

9. To bewilder, so as that the way is no longer known.

I will go lose myself
And wander up and down to view the city. Shaksp.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flit and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. K. Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetition of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.

But rebel wit defects thee oft in vain,
Lost in the maze of words he turns again. Pope.

10. To deprive of.
How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion? Temple.

11. Not to employ; not to enjoy.
The happy have whole days, and those they use;
Th' unhappy have but hours, and these they lose. Dryden.

To lose these years which worthier thoughts require,
To lose that health which should those thoughts inspire. Savage.

12. To squander; to throw away.
I no more complain,
Time, health, and fortune are not lost in vain. Pope.

13. To suffer to vanish from view.

are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery. Pope.

16. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.

These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Charendon.

17. To be freed from; as, to lose a fever.
His feely back the bunch has got Which Edwin lost before. Parnell.

To LOSK. v. n.

1. Not to win.
We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.

2. To decline; to fail.
Willson in discourse with her Loses discomenanc'd, and like folly shews. Milton.

LO'ZABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.

Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it,
be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not lozable by them. Boyle.

LO'SEL. n. f. [from lopiun, to parish.]
A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow.
Obsolete.

Such losses and scatterings cannot easily, by any thought, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Speiser.

A lost wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Fairy Queen.

Be not with work of losses wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hub. Tale.

By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whole losses by losses cloth shew
More here then is needful to tell. Tusser.

A gross lag!
And, lost, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakespeare.

LOSER. n. f. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope; the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shaksp.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor.

To Low. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably misprinted for lower.

The value of guineas was lowed from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings. Swift.

To Low. v. n. [hloman, Sax. The adjective low, not high, is pronounced lo, and would rhyme to no: the verb low, to bellow, low; and is by Dryden rightly rhymed to now.] To bellow as a cow.

Doth the wild ass bray when he has grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder? Job.

The maids of Argos, who, with frantick cries,

And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Kingdom.

Far lo grac'd his shield, but lo now,

With horns exalted stands, and seems to low. Dryd.

Had he been born some simple shepherd's heifer!

The lowing herd, or fleecy sheep his care. Prior.

LOWBELL. n. f. [laeye, Dutch; leg, Sax.

or log, Islandick, a flame, and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are awakened by a bell, and lured

by a flame into a net. Low denotes a flame in Scotland; and to lowe, to flame.

LOWE. The termination of local names.

Low, low, comes from the Saxon hleap, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick hlau is a monument or barrow. Gibson.

To LOWE. v. a. [from low.]

1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.

As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,

Let all the naval world due homage pay:

With holy reverence their top-honours lower,

Contesting the asserted power. Prior.

2. To suffer to sink down.

When water issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers

them, and lets them fall. Woodward.

3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.

The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money. Locke.

Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest. Child on Trade.

To LOWE. v. n. To grow less; to fall;

to sink.

The present pleasure,

By revolution low'ing, does become

The opposite of itself. Shakespeare.

To LOWE. v. a. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word: if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance: the ow sounds as ou in hour; in the word lower,

when it means to grow, or make low, the ow sounds as o in more.]

1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy;

to be clouded.

Now is the winter of our discontent

Made glorious summer by this sun of York;

And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,

In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shaksp.

The low'ring spring, with lavish rain,

Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryd.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable teenes. Addison.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low's,

And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

If on Swilth's feast the welkin low's,

And ev'ry penthouse stream with hilly show'rs,

Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces draw.

Gay.

LOW

The king-becoming graces, As justice, verity, temperance, stoutness, Bounty, perfect grace, mercy, lowliness, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude; I have no reliſh of the. Shaksp.

With lowliness majestick, from her seat, And grace, that won who saw to with her stay. Milton.

If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fear of God, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust. Atterbury.

Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in that lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose. Spenser.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice; it is my duty to give testimony to virtue. Dryden.

LOW'LY. adj. [from low.]

Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart. Matthew.

He did bend to us a little, and put his arms broad; we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death. Ba.

With cries they fill'd the holy lane; Then thus with lowly voice Dionysus began. Dryd.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how low a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a Nature so much superior to our own! Rogers.

Mean; wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive names, One common right the great and lowly claims. Pope.

Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain, Pile rural poems, and their lowly strain, The name of Venus oft intend'd shall see. Dryden.

LOX

Lo'wly. adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.

I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught; I know my business is but to the court. Shaksp.

'Tis better to be lowly born, And range with humble livers in content, Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief, And wear a golden sorrow. Shaksp.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heav'n is for thee too high To know what passes there; be lowly wife: Think only what concerns thee, and thy being. Milton.

LOW'NESS. n. f. [from low.]

1. Contrariety to height; small distance from the ground.

They know By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if death Or poison follow. Shaksp.

The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom. Bacon.

In Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness opens it in breadth. Adison.

2. Meanness of character or condition, whether mental or external.

Nothing could have subdu'd a nature To such a lowness but his unkind daughter. Shaksp.

Now I must To the young man send humble treaties, And palter in the shift of lowness. Shaksp.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of tenants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness of style or sentiment.

This tale is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lowness, that of Pericles is the hardness of his metaphors. Dryd.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so potent a king as his father. Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection.

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person. Swift.

LOW'THOUGHTED. adj. [low and thought.]

Having the thoughts withheld from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow-minded.

Above the smook and stir of this dirt spot, Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care, Strive to keep up a head and flourish being. Idt.

Oh grace serene! Oh virtue heavenly fair! Divine oblation of lowthoughted care! Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky, And faith our early immortality! Pope.

LOW'SPIRITED. adj. [low and spirit.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspirited moped creature. Luc.

LOXODROMICK. n. f. [loxos and dromos.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhombs, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhombs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick. Harris.

LUB

LOYAL. adj. [loyal, Fr.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloucester's treachery, And of the loyal service of his son, When I inform'd him, then he call'd me for. Shaksp.

The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties. Knollys.

Loyal subjects often leave their prince, Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail, wedded love! by thee Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure. Milton.

Thine Laodamia with Evadne moves, Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves. Dryden.

The cedar, by the insligation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians. Howel.

LOYALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

The circling year I wait, with ampler stores, And sifter pomp, to had my native shores; Then by my realms due homage would be paid, For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd. Pope.

LOYALTY. n. f. [loialté, Fr.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make Our faith mere folly; yet he that can endure To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord, Dears conquer him that did his master conquer. Shaksp.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required. Clarendon.

Abdies faithful found Unshaken, uneduc'd, eternally, His loyalty he kept.

For loyalty is still the same, Whether it win or lose the game; True as the dial to the sun, Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

LOZENGE. n. f. [loſenge, French. Of unknown etymology.]

1. A rhomb.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or lozenge. Watson.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.

Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbers Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

LUBBER. n. f. [Of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbed, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat.]

A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky fellow; a booby.

For to tempt and showers deceiveth a many, And hugs me lubbers loose many a penny. Tupper.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, pouncing like a fat lubber out of breath. Carew.

They clasp the lubber Ajax on the shoulder, As at his feet were on brave Hector's breast, And great Troy shrinking. Shaksp.

A notable lubber thou representest him to be. Shaksp.

Tell how the drudging goblin sweats; His shadowy bail hath thread'd the corn,

LUB

That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fond. Milton.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state mankind beside. Dry.
How can you name that supernumerated lubber?
Congress.

LUBBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky.

I came to Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy. Shakespeare.

LUBBERLY. adv. Awkwardly; clumsily.

Merry Andrew on the low rope copies lubberly
the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high. Dryden.

throw,

And now'd down armies in the fights of lu. Pope.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To make smooth or slippery; to smooth.

There are ailments which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree. Arbuth.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate. Sharp.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus,
Lat.] To smooth; to make slippery.

LUBRICITY. n. f. [from lubricus, Latin,
lubricité, French.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature;
the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation. Ray.

3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.

The manifold impoliticities and lubricities of mutter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification. Mure.
He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, expected them not out of the charge of universal care; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconsequence of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject. Guanville.

A state of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune. Leffing.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.

From the lechery of these fanns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided. Dryden.

LUBRIC. adj. [lubricus, Lat.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.

A throng
Of short thick fobs, whose thund'ring valley's float
And roll themselves over her lubric throat
In panting murmurs. Cragshaw.

2. Uncertain; unsteady.

I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubric waves of fate, till he is swallowed in the gulph of fatality. Wotton.

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]

Why were we hurry'd down
This lubric and adult'rate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
To encrease the flaming ordures of the flage? Dryden.

LUBRICOUS. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth.

The parts of water being volatile and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it. Woodward.

2. Uncertain.

The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions. Glauville.

LUBRIFICATION. n. f. [lubricus and fio,
Lat.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for theunction and lubrication of the heads of the bones; an oily

LUC

one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the arti-culations. Ray on Creation.

LUBRICATION. n. f. [lubricus and facio, Lat.] The act of lubricating or smooth-
ing.

The cause is tribulation and relaxation, as in medicines emollient; such as milk, honey, and mallows. Bacon.

pike full grown.

They give the dozen white lues in their coat. Shakespeare.

LUCENT. adj. [lucens, Latin.] Shining; bright; splendid.

I meant the day, but should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent light. Ben Jonson.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb,
Through his glaz'd optick tube yet never saw. Milton.

LUCERN. n. f. [medica.] An herb remarkable for quick growth.

LUCID. adj. [lucidus, Lat. lucide, Fr.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd; Liveries than Meibaran. Milton.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and heat on object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a winter light. Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, at the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by discharging against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm. Newton.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the up'ning orb to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the turtle banks,
Of Abana and Pharpar, lucid streams. Milton.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. Gulliver's Travels.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long diffusions of the two houses, which,
although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired
he would please to let me see his book. Tatler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never to wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conference. Bentley.

LUCIDITY. n. f. [from lucid.] Splendour; brightness.

LUCIFEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt. Boyle.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge, and to mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorisick, is interrupted. Grew.

LUCK. n. f. [geluck, Dutch.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

LUC

He forc'd his neck into a noose,
To shew his play at last and loose;
And, when he chanc'd to escape, shiftook.
For art and subtlety, his luck. Hudibras.
Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

2. Fortune, good or bad.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miteries. Spenser.
Farewell, good luck go with thee. Shakespeare.
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me, that rebellion had all luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. Shakespeare.

That part of mankind who have had justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent. Temple.
Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being favourites indeed. South.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat,
But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat,
Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat. Tate.

LUCKILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately;
by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form. Dryden.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new era of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all his qualifications. Addis.

LUCKINESS. n. f. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excite the irregularity of his proceeding. Locke.

LUCKLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miteries. Spenser.

Never shall my thoughts be late,
Though luckless, yet without disgrace. Snelling.

What else but his immoderate lust of power,
Prayers made and grunts d in a lucifick hour? Dry.

LUCKY. adj. [from luck; geluckig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky might,
Dispar'd with that deformed, dismal light,
Fled fast away. Spenser.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the roth,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. Addis.

LUCRATIVE. adj. [lucratus, Fr. lucrati- vus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so. Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture. Brownie.

LUCRE. n. f. [lucrum, Lat.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Malice and lucie in them
Have laid this woe here. Shakespeare.

They all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn
Of love and ambition. Milton.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of power, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of love, and the dread of death. Pope.

LUCRIFEROUS. adj. [lucrum and fero,
Lat.] Gainful; profitable.

Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the costs and pains considered, was not lucriferos. Boyle.

LUCRIFICK. adj. [lucrum and facio, Lat.]
Producing gain.

LUCTATION. n. f. [luctor, Lat.] Struggle; effort; contest.

Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still

Through hedges. Dryden.

Whole pleasure is to see a strumpet tear

A cymek's beard, and lug him by the hair. Dryd.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and to lug off every one his share. Collier.

2. To LUG out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But butt and belmen never know these cares,

No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;

They will be heard, or they lug out and cut. Dry.

To LUG. v. n. To drag; to come heavily;

perhaps only misprinted for laga.

My dragging soul flies under her own pitch,

Like lowl in air, too damp, and lugs along.

As it were a body in a body. Dryden.

LU. n. f.

A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchable pilchards,

ing worms, lugs, and little crabs. Carew.

[In Scotland.] An ear.

Lug, a land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd

For the large leap which Debon did compel

LUL

Cessant to make, being right legs of ground. Spens.

LU'GAGE. n. f. [from lag.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back. Shakspeare.

What do you mean

To doat thus on such luggage? Shakspeare.

Think not thou to find me slack, or need

Thy politic maxims, or that cumbersome

Luggage of war there show me. Milton.

How durst thou with that luggage

O' th' self, old ir'n, and other baggage,

To oppose thy lumber against us? Hudib.

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the rustling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked. Glauville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,

And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dry.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LU'GUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubre, Fr. lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many men's humilitious. Decay of Piet.

LU'KEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is hleod; in old Frisick hlj; in Dutch lieue; whence probably our lue, to which warm may be added, to determine,

by the first word, the force of the second;

as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

A dreary corse, whole life away did pass,

All hallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,

That from his wound yet welled fresh alas! Spens.

May you a better least never behold,

You knot of mouth friends: smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. Shakspeare.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to counteract hot and sharp humours. Wigman's Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power, that water, which alone distils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue stedfast, it is an obedience to lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue

In lukewarm patriots Addison.

LU'KEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth.

2. With indifference.

LU'KEWARMNESS. n. f. [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Spratt.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the real of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL. v. a. [lulu, Danish; lallo, Lat.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down

A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play

Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound

To lull him fast asleep, that by it lay. F. Queen.

Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,

To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

These lull'd by nightingales embracing sleep. Milton.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find & see it shall not be his hap,

[And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap. Milton.

LUM

No more these scenes my meditations aid,

Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson.

LU'LLABY. n. f. [lullus, Lat. Quem nutricum fuisse deum contendit Turnebus, from lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kept,

Sing lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.

Philomel, with melody,

Sing in your sweet lullaby;

Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shaksp.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.

—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakspeare.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke on Education.

LUMBA'GO. n. f. [lumbi, Lat. the loins.]

Lumbago are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shuddering, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers. Quinc.

LUMBER. n. f. [loma, geloma, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering, the dirt of a house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated

By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,

And thrown amongst the common lumber. Otway.

One son at home

Concerns thee more than many guests to come.

If to some useful art he be not bred,

He grows mere lumber, and is worse than dead. Dryden.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,

Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor, Dryden.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber. Grew.

The poring scholiasts mark;

Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;

A lumber-house of books in every head. Pope.

To LUMBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Rolls we must have too much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. Haymer.

To LUMBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burdened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,

Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood. Dryden.

LU'MINARY. n. f. [luminare, Lat. lumi-

nare, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary

Dispenses light from far. Milton.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what lumi- naries he eloped in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

3. Anyone that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island. Bentley.

LU'MINATION. n. f. [from lumen, Lat.]

Emission of light. Dick.

LU'MINOUS. adj. [luminous, Fr.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and inclinate. Bacon.

Its first convex divides

The luminous inferior orbs in lucifer,

From chaos. Milton.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bentley.

*But though there's not a single word,
I will not have thee in the world.* Madison.
There's a word that you keep company with those that, when they had themselves upon a pinch, will have thee from them in the world. L'Esrange.

Can you be any more word with those of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is bait to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbuth.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison.

To LURCH. v. n. [loeren, Dutch, or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving goodness on my left hand, and luring mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shaksp.

2. To lie in wait; we now rather use
lurk.

While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurking upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Esrange.

To LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Latin.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game
lurch.]

He waxed like a fox;
And, in the brunt of fifteen battles since,
He lurcht all swords o' th' garland. Shaksp.
God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should to quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South.

3. To steal privily; to slich; to pilfer.

LU'CHER. n. f. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the fuddling lurcher flies;
Whilst every honest tongue stoppeth his rounds. Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.
I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Tatler.

3. [lurco, Lat.] A glutton; a gorman-dizer. Not used.

LURE. n. f. [lurre, Fr. lore, Dut.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till the swoop, the milt not be full gorg'd,
For then the never looks upon her lure. Shaksp.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fane and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon's Henry vii.

A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

This lute-neck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure defend. Denham.

A false Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarts, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent? Milton.

Lure
Held out her lure to his superior eye,
And griev'd to see him pass contemptuous by. Madden.

To LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks,

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offender, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

To LURE. v. n. To attract; to entice;
to draw.

As a good stock
Of ravens flew, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies the encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lur'd on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure
From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various sciences lures the learned eye. Gay.

LU'RID. adj. [luridus, Lat.] Gloomy; dismal. Not used.

Slow settling o'er the lurid grove,
Unusual darkness broods. Thomson.

To LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See LUNCH.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in louthsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Fairy Queen.

Milbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through. Carew.

They lay not to live by their woe,
But theavily loiter and lurk. Tupper's Husbandry.

If sinners enter thee, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Proverbs.

The wife, when danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest, and fecundest by her husband slays. Milton.

The lurking gold upon the fatal tree. Dryden.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and murther'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

LU'CKER. n. f. [from lurk.] A thief that lies in wait.

LU'CKINGPLACE. n. f. [lurk and place.]
Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Samuel.

LU'CIOS. adj. [from delicious, say some;
but Skinner more probably derives it from lucivorus, corruptly pronounced.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

2. Sweet in a great degree.

The food that to him now is as lucivorus as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as coloquintida. Shaksp.
With brandish'd blade ruth on him, break his glass.

And shed the lucivorus liquor on the ground. Milt.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the lust,
And ransom keep their lucivorus native taste. Dryd.

3. Pleading; delightful.
He will bait him in with the lucivorus proposal of some gaudy purchase. South.

LU'SCIOUSLY. adv. [from lucivorus.] Sweet to a great degree.

LU'SCIOUSNESS. n. f. [from lucivorus.] Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be a greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensuality whose lucivorusness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him? Decay of Picty.

Pearl breed worms by reason of the lucivorusness and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LU'SEY. n. f. [lupus, cervarius, Lat.] A lynx.

LU'N. adj. Of a dark, deep, full colour, opposite to pale and faint; from lunche.

Shaksp.

LUNE. adj. [lunche, Fr.] Idle; lazy; worthless. Dict.

LU'SKISH. adj. [from lusk.] Somewhat inclining to laziness or indolence.

LU'SKISHLY. adv. [from luskish.] Lazily; indolently.

LU'SKISHNESS. n. f. [from luskish.] A disposition to laziness. Spenser.

LUSO'RIOUS. adj. [lujorius, Lat.] Used in play; sportive.

Things more open to exception, yet unjustly condemned as unlawful; such as the lujorious lute, dancing, and stage-plays. Bishop Sanderson.

LU'SORY. adj. [lujorius, Lat.] Used in play.

There might be many entertaining continuances, for the instruction of children in geometry and geography, in such alluring and lujory methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression. Watts on the Mind.

LUST. n. f. [lyst, Sax. lyst, Dutch.]

1. Carnal desire.

Thus our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn, epicurish and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grace'd palace. Shaksp.

Lust and rank thoughts.
They are immoderately given to the lust of the flesh, making no conscience to get ballards. Albort.

When a temptation of lust assaults thee, do not rebel it by disputing with it, but fly from it, that is, think not at all of it. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. Any violent or irregular desire.

I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Isaiah.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty willows they imagined. Psalms.

Virtue was represented by Hercules: he is drawn offering to strike a dragon; by the dragon are meant all manner of lusts. Peacock on Drawing.

All weigh our acts, and what's or seems unjust,
Impute not to necessity, but lust. Dryden.

The lust of lucre. Pope.

3. Vigour; active power; lucivorusness. Not used.

Trees will grow greater, and bear better fruit, if you put salt, or less of wine, or blood, to the root:
the cause may be, the increasing the lust or spirit of the root. Baron.

To LUST. v. n.

1. To desire carnally.

Inconstant man, that loved all he saw,
And lust after all that he did love. Lucycommon.

2. To desire vehemently.

Giving sometimes prodigally; not because he loved them to whom he gave, but because he lust
to give. Shaksp.

The Christian captives in chains could no way move themselves, if they should unadvisedly lust
after liberty. Knollys.

3. To list; to like. Out of use.

Their eyes swell with tears, and they do even what they lust. Psalms.

4. To have irregular dispositions, or desires.

The mixed multitude tell a lustful tale, and the children of Israel also wept, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? Numbers.

The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy. Psalms.

LU'STIFUL. adj. [lust and full.]

1. Libidinous; having irregular desires.

Turning wrathful fire to lustful heat,
With beauty in thought but to have defild. Fairy Queen.

There is no man that is temperate or lustful, but besides the guilt likewise stains and obscures his soul. Shaksp.

2. Provoking to sensuality; inspiring to lust.

Thence his lustful orgies he enlarg'd. Milton.

LU'STIFULLY. adv. [from lustful.] With sensual concupiscence.

LU'STULNESS. n. f. [from lustful.] Li-bidinousness.

LUSTINED. } n. f. [from lusty.] Vigour;
LUSTINOOD. } sprightliness; corporal ability. Not in use.

A goodly personage,
 Now in his freshest flower of lustful red,
 Fit to inflame fair lady with love's rage. Spenser.
 Reason and respect
 Make livers pale, and lustfulness doth deject. Shakspeare.
 I'll prove it on his body;

Despight his nice fence, and his active practice,
 His May of youth and bloom of lustfulness. Shakspeare.

LUSTILY. adv. [from lusty.] Stoutly;
 with vigour; with mettle.

I determine to fight lustily for him. Shakspeare.
 Now, gentlemen,
 Let's tune and to it lustily a while. Shakspeare.

LUSTINESS. n. f. [from lusty.] Stoutness;
 sturdiness; strength; vigour of body.

Fresh Chiron being ready flight,
 He with good speed began to take his flight
 Over the fields in his trunk lustiness. Spenser.

Where there is so great a prevention of the ordinary time, it is the lustiness of the child, but when it is less, it is some indisposition of the mother. Bacon.

Cupid's flames were famous for their lustiness, and being in good liking, were set on a stall to show the good habit of their body, and made to play tricks before the buyers to show their activity and strength. Dryden & Persius.

LUSTLESS. adj. [from lust.] Not vigorous;
 weak.

LUSTRAL. adj. [lustral, Fr. lustralis, Lat.]
 Used in purification.

His better parts by lustral waves refin'd,
 More pure, and nearer to æthereal mind. Garth.

LUSTRATION. n. f. [lustration, Fr. lustratio, Lat.] Purification by water.

Joh's religious care
 His sons assemble, whose united prayers,
 Like sweet perfumes, from golden censurs rise;
 He with divine lustrations sanctifies. Sandys.

That spirits are corporeal seems a conceit derogative unto himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby be established the doctrine of lustrations, simulacra, and charms. Brown.

Should Jo's priest command
 A pilgrimage to Meroc's burning sand;
 Through deserts they would seek the secret spring,
 And holy water for lustration bring. Dryden.

What were all their lustrations, but so many solemn purgings, to render both themselves and their sacrifices acceptable to their gods? South.

By ardent prayer, and clear lustration,
 Purge the contagious spots of human weakness;
 Inspire no mortal can behold Apollo. Prior.

LUSTRE. n. f. [lustre, Fr.]

1. Brightness; splendour; glitter.
 You have one eye left to see some mischief on him.
 —Left it see more, prevent it; out, vile gally!
 where is thy lustre now? Shakspeare.

To the soul time doth perfection give,
 And adds fresh lustre to her beauty still. Devis.

The scorching sun was mounted high,
 In lustre, to the noonday sky. Addison.

But but some fleeting years, and these poor eyes,
 Where now without a bonnet some lustre lies,
 No longer shall their little honours keep,
 But only be of use to read or weep. Prior.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair,
 The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. A luster with lights.
 Ridotta tips, and dances till she see
 The doubling lustres dance as quick as she. Pope.

3. Eminence; renown.
 His ancestors continued about four hundred years, rather without obscurity than with any great lustre. Wotton.

I used to wonder how a man of birth and spirit could endure to be wholly insignificant and obscure in a foreign country, when he might live with lustre in his own. Swift.

4. [from lustre, Fr. lustre, Lat.] The space of five years.

Both of us have cloied the tenth lustre, and it is time to determine how we shall play the last act of the Yare. Belinbrooke.

LUSTRING. n. f. [from lustre.] A shining silk; commonly pronounced lustring.

LUSTROUS. adj. [from lustre.] Bright; shining; luminous.

 In full luxuriance rolls. Thougn's Summer.

LUXURIANT. adj. [luxurians, Lat.] Exuberant; superfluously plentiful.

A sweet and luxuriant speech becomes youth well, but not age. Bacon.

The mantling vine gently creeps luxuriant. Milt.
 If the fancy of Ovid be luxuriant, it is his character to be so. Dryden.

Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,
 But show no mercy to an empty line. Pope.

TO LUXURIATE. v. n. [luxurio, Lat.]
 To grow exuberantly; to shoot with superfluous plenty.

LUXURIOUS. adj. [luxuricus, Fr. luxuriosus,
 Latin.]

1. Delighting in the pleasures of the table.
 2. Administering to luxury.

Those whom last thou saw'st
 In triumph, and luxurious wealth, are they First seen in acts of prowess eminent,
 And great exploits; but of true virtue void. Milt.

The luxurious board. Anon.

3. Lustful; libidinous.
 She knows the heat of a luxurious bed:
 Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakspeare.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakspeare.

4. Voluptuous; enslaved to pleasure.
Luxurious cities, where the noise
 Of riot ascends above their loftiest tow'rs. Milton.

5. Softening by pleasure.

 foolish elation of heart. Spectator.

2. Lust; lewdness.
 Urge his hateful luxury,
 His bestial appetite in change of lust,
 Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives. Shakspeare.

3. Luxuriance; exuberance.
 Young trees of several kinds set contiguous in a fruitful ground, with the luxury of the trees will incorporate. Bacon.

4. Delicious fare.
 He cut the side of the rock for a garden, and by laying on it earth, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

LY. A very frequent termination both of names of places and of adjectives and adverbs. When ly terminates the name of a place, it is derived from leaz, Sax.
 a field. Gibson. When it ends an adjective or adverb, it is contracted from lick, like: as, beakly, beaklike;
plainly, plainlike.

LYCANTHROPY. n. f. [lycanthropie, Fr.
lycas and anthropos.] A kind of madness, in which men have the qualities of wild beasts.

LYM

the face of a man in his sleep, and grows as much the wider as the man that dreamt of a ghost-ship, and was for ever after weary not to come near a sleep.

LYKE, adj. for like.

LYING, participial noun, from lie, whether it signifies to be recumbent, or to speak falsely, or otherwise.

They will have me whipt for speaking true, thou wilt have me whipt for lying, and sometimes I am whipt for holding my peace.

Many tears and temptations befall me by the lying in wait of the Jews.

LYMPH, n. f. [lymph, Fr. lymphe, Lat.] Water; transparent colourless liquor.

When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph, the most spirituous and elaborated part of the blood.

LYMPHATED, adj. [lymphatus, Lat.] Mad.

LYMPHATICK, n. f. [lymphatique, Fr. from lymphe, Lat.]

The lymphatick are slender pellucid tubes, whose cavities are contracted at small and unequal distances; they are carried into the glands of the mesentery.

LYR

LYNDEN TREE, n. f. [tilia, Lat.] A plant.

LYNX, n. f. [Latin.] A spotted beast, remarkable for speed and sharp sight.

He that has an idea of a beast with spots, has but a confused idea of a leopard, it not being thereby sufficiently distinguished from a lynx.

What modes of fight betwixt each wide extreme, The mole's dim curtain, and the lion's beam.

LYRE, n. f. [lyre, Fr. lyra, Lat.] A harp; a musical instrument to which poetry is, by poetical writers, supposed to be sung.

With other notes than to the Orphean lyre. Milton. My sweetest verse, my darling lyre, Upon Euphelia's toilet lay.

LYR

He never touched his lyre in such a truly dramatick manner as upon that occasion.

LYRIC, adj. [lyricus, Lat. lyrique, Fr.] LYRICAL, adj. Pertaining to a harp, or to odes or poetry sung to a harp; singing to a harp.

All his trophies hung and sets enroll'd In copious legend, or sweet lyric song.

Somewhat of the purity of English, somewhat of more equal thoughts, somewhat of sweetness in the numbers; in one word, somewhat of a finer turn, and more lyrical verse, is yet wanting.

The lute neglected, and the lyric muse, Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow, And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe.

LYRICK, n. f. A poet who writes songs to the harp.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricists, did not only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to music himself.

LYRIST, n. f. [lyristes, Lat.] A musician who plays upon the harp.

His tender theme the clapping lyrist chose, Minerva's anger, and the direful woes Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore.

MAC

M Has, in English, one unvaried sound, by compression of the lips; as, mine, tame, camp: it is never mute.

MACARON, n. f. [macarone, Italian.]

1. A coarse, rude, low fellow; whence macaronick poetry, in which the language is purposely corrupted.

Like a big wife, at sight of loathed meat, Ready to travel; so I sigh and sweat, To hear this macaron talk on in vain.

2. [macaron, Fr.] A kind of sweet biscuit, made of flower, almonds, eggs, and sugar.

MACAW, n. f. A bird in the West Indies, the largest species of parrot.

MACAW-TREE, n. f.

A species of the palm-tree, very common in the Canibee Islands, where the negroes pierce the tender fruit, whence issues a pleasant liquor; and the body of the tree affords a solid timber, supposed by some to be a sort of ebony.

MAZE, n. f. [mæzæ, Sax. maza, Spanish.]

1. An enigm of authority bore before magistrates.

He mightily upheld that royal maze Which now thou bear'st.

2. [maïûe, Fr. maïûa, Lat.] A heavy blunt weapon; a club of metal.

O murtherous slumber! Lay'st thou thy loaden mace upon my boy That plays thee music?

The Turkish troops breaking in with their scymitars and heavy iron maces, made a most bloody execution.

Death with his mace petrified snote.

With his mace their monarch struck the ground; With inward trembling earth receiv'd the wound, And rising streams a ready passage found.

The mighty mace with such luste descended, They break the bones, and make the armour bend.

3. [mace, Latin.] A kind of spire.

MAC

The nutmeg is inclosed in a threefold covering, of which the second is mace: it is thin and membranaceous, of an oleaginous and a yellowish colour: it has an extremely fragrant, aromatick, and agreeable smell, and a pleasant, but acrid and oleaginous taste.

Water, vinegar, and honey, is a most excellent sudorific: it is more effectual with a little mace added to it.

MACEALE, n. f. [mace and ale.] Ale spiced with mace.

I prescribed him a draught of maceale, with hopes to dispose him to rest.

MAC'BEARER, n. f. [mace and bear.] One who carries the mace before persons in authority.

I was placed at a quadrangular table, opposite to the mace-bearer.

TO MAC'ERATE, v. a. [macero, Latin; macerer, French.]

1. To make lean; to wear away.

Recurrent pains of the stomach, megrims, and other recurrent head-achs, macerate the parts, and render the looks of patients consumptive and pining.

2. To mortify; to harass with corporal hardships.

Covetous men are all fools; for what greater folly can there be, or madness, than for such a man to macerate himself when he need not?

Out of an excess of zeal they practise mortifications; they macerate their bodies, and impair their health.

3. To steep almost to solution.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore macerated in two cythes of water.

MACERATION, n. f. [maceration, French; from macerate.]

1. The act of wasting, or making lean.

2. Mortification; corporal hardships.

MA'CHINAL, adj. [from machina, Lat.] Relating to machines.

TO MA'CHINATE, v. a. [machinar, Lat. machiner, Fr.] To plan; to contrive.

MA'CHINATION, n. f. [machinatio, Lat. machination, Fr. from machinâté.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you miscarry, Your business of the world hath for an end, And machination ceases.

O from their machinations free, That would my guiltless soul betray;

From those who in my wrongs agree, And for my life their engines lay!

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell! And devilish machinations come to night.

How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry.

MA'CHINE, n. f. [machina, Lat. machine, Fr.] This word is pronounced mayken.

1. Any complicated work in which one part contributes to the motion of another.

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials.

In a watch's fine machine, The added movements which declare How full the moon, how old the year, Derive their secondary power.

From that which simply points the hour.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side,
Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryden.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

MACHINERY. n. f. [from machine.]

1. Engineering; complicated workmanship; self-moved engines.

2. The machinery signifies that part which the deities, angels, or demons, act in a poem. Pope.

MA'CHINIST. n. f. [machiniste, Fr. from machine, Lat.] A constructor of engines or machines.

MA'CILENCY. n. f. [from macilent.] Leanness. Diff.

MA'CILENT. adj. [macilentus, Latin.] Lean.

MA'CKEREL. n. f. [markereel, Dut. maquerel, Fr.] A sea fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting and mackerel. Carew.

Law ordered that the Sunday should have rest; And that no nymph her noisy food should sell, Except it were new milk or mackerel. King.

Sooner shall cats disport in water clear, And speckled mackerels graze the meadows fair, Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.

MACKEREL-GALE seems to be, in Dryden's cant, a strong breeze; such, I suppose, as is desired to bring mackerel fresh to market.

They put up every sail,
The wind was fair, but blew a mackerel-gale. Dryd.

MA'CROCOSM. n. f. [macrocosme, Fr. μακρος and κοσμος.] The whole world, or visible system, in opposition to the microcosm, or world of man.

MACTATION. n. f. [mactatus, Lat.] The act of killing for sacrifice.

MACULA. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A spot.

And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or macula greater than usual, and by that means be darkened. Burnet.

2. [In physick.] Any spots upon the skin, whether those in fevers or scorbutick habits.

To MA'CLULATE. v. a. [maculo, Lat.] To stain; to spot.

MACULATION. n. f. [from maculate.] Stain; spot; taint.

I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart. Shaksp.

MA'CLE. n. f. [macula, Lat.] A spot; a stain.

MAD. adj. [genus, Sax. matto, Italian.]

1. Disordered in the mind; broken in the understanding; distracted; delirious without a fever.

Alack, Sir, he is mad.

'Tis the time's plague when madmen lead the blind. Shaksp.

This mulick made me, let it sound no more;
For though it have help'd madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad. Shaksp.

Cupid, of thee the poets sung,
Thy mother from the sea was sprung;
But they were mad to make thee young.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad folks they break their locks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can. Taylor.

A bear, enraged at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad into the beegarden, and over-turn'd all the hives. L'Estrange.

Madmen ought not to be mad.

But who can help his folly? Dryden.
But some strange grace had led him to his head,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

2. Expressing disorder of mind.

His gestures force
He mark'd, and mad demon-door when alone. Mil.

3. Overrun with any violent or unreasonable desire; with on, after, or perhaps better for, before the object of desire.

It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Jeremiah.

The world is running mad after force, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatick writing. Dryden.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons. Rymer.

4. Enraged; furious.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havock of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them. Decay of Piety.

To MAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to enrage.

O villain! cried out Zelmane, madd'd with finding an unlooked-for rival. Sidney.

This will stir me outwardly,
As strongly as the confidence does within,
To the madding of her lord. Shaksp.

This madd me, that perhaps ignoble hands
Have overlaid him, for they could not conquer. Dryden.

To MAD. v. n. To be mad; to be furious.

The madding wheels
Of brazen chariots rag'd: dire was the noise
Of conflicts! Milton's Paradise Lost.

She, mixing with a throng
Of madding matrons, bears the bride along. Dryd.

MAD. n. f. [maðu, Sax.] An earthworm.

MA'DAM. n. f. [ma dame, Fr. my dame.]

The term of compliment used in address to ladies of every degree. It was anciently spoken as in French, with the accent upon the last syllable.

Certes, madam, ye have a great cause of plaint. Spem.

Madam, once more you look and move a queen! Philips.

MA'DBRAIN. } adj. [mad and brain.]

MA'DBRAINED. } Disordered in the mind; hotheaded.

I give my hand oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a madbrain rudely, full of spleen. Shaksp.

He let fall his book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
This madbrain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book. Shaksp.

MA'DCAP. n. f. [mad and cap; either taking the cap for the head, or alluding to the caps put upon distracted persons by way of distinction.] A madman; a wild hotheaded fellow.

That is Biron, the merry madcap lord;
Not a word with him but a jest. Shaksp.

The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that dash the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shaksp.

To MA'DDEN. v. n. [from mad.] To become mad; to act as mad.

The dog-star rages, nay 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out;
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land. Pope.

To MA'DDEN. v. a. To make mad.

Such mad'ning draughts of beauty,
As for a while o'erwhelm'd his raptur'd thought. Thomson.

MA'DDER. n. f. [madder, Sax.] A plant.

The flower of the madder consists of one single leaf, which is cut into four or five segments, and expanded at the top; the flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit, composed of two juicy berries cloves joined together, containing each the seed of a new berry; the leaves are green and favour the stalks in whorls.

Madder is cultivated in vast quantities in France; what the Dutch send over for medicinal is the root, which is easily dried; but the green quantity is used by the dyers, who have it less coarse powder.

MADE. The participle preterit of make. Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parent, but that the works of God should be made manifest. Jo.

MADEFACTION. n. f. [madefacio, Lat.] The act of making wet.

To all madefaction there is required an ambition. Bac.

To MA'DEIFY. v. a. [madefico, Latin.] moisten; to make wet.

MA'DGEHOWLET. n. f. [dubo.] An owl.

MA'DHOUSE. n. f. [mad and house.]

house where madmen are cured or confined.

A fellow in a madhouse being asked how he came there? Why, says he, the mad folks abroad are many for us, and so they have mastered all the best people, and cooped them up here. L'Estr.

MA'DLY. adv. [from mad.] Without understanding; furiously.

He wad'd a torch aloft, and madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dry.

MA'DMAN. n. f. [mad and man.] A man deprived of his understanding.

They shall be like madmen, sparing none, I still sporting. 2 E. 4.

He that eagerly pursues any thing, is no better than a madman. L'Estr.

He who ties a madman's hands, or takes away his sword, loves his person while he disarms his frenzy. Sot.

MA'DNESS. n. f. [from mad.]

1. Distraction; loss of understanding; perturbation of the faculties.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunacy: he so buffets himself on the forehead, that any madnes I ever yet beheld, seemed but tannels and civility to this distemper. Shaksp.

There are degrees of madnes as of folly, and disorderly jumbling ideas together, in some more some less. Loc.

2. Fury; wildness of passion; rage.

The power of God sets bounds to the raging the sea, and restrains the madnes of the people. King Chari.

He rav'd with all the madnes of despair,
He roar'd, he beat his breast, and tore his hair. Dryd.

MADRIER. n. f.

Madrier, in war, is a thick plank armed with iron plates, having a cavity sufficient to receive the mouth of the petard when charged, with which it is applied against a gate, or other thing intended to be broken down. Bail.

MA'DRIGAL. n. f. [madrigal, Spanish and French, from mandra, Latin; whence was written anciently mandriale, Italian.]

A pastoral song; any light airy short song.

A madrigal is a little amorous piece, which contains a certain number of unequal verses, not tied to the scrupulous regularity of a sonnet, or suitability of an epigram: it consists of one single rail of verses, and in that differs from a canzone which consists of several strophes, which return the same order and number. Bail.

Waters, by whose falls
Birds sing melodious madrigals. Shaksp.

His artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal. Milto.

Their tongue is light and trifling in comparison of the English; more proper for sonnets, madrigals and elegies, than heroic poetry. Dryde.

MA'DWORT. n. f. [mad and wort.] An herb.

MERE. adv. It is derived from the Saxon insp, famous, great, noted: so almere.

MAGAZINE, n. f. [magazine, French; from the Arabick makhzan, a treasure.]
1. A storehouse, commonly an arsenal or armoury, or repository of provisions.
If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and ammunitions. Raleigh.
Plain heroic magnitude of mind
Their armories and magazines contents. Milton.
None o'er the public magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryd.
Useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pope.
His head was so well stored a magazine, that nothing could be proposed which he was not master of. Locke.
2. Of late this word has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany called the Gentleman's Magazine, and published under the name of Sylvanus Urban, by Edward Cave.

MAGICK, n. f. [magus, Latin.] A magician.
Spenser.
MAGGOT, n. f. [magrod, Welsh; millepeda, Latin; maßu, Saxon.]
1. A small grub, which turns into a fly.
Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots. Ray.
From the lore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth.
2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy. A low word.
Tallata phrases, fliken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot observation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express't
In russet yeas, and honest kerly noes. Shakespeare.
To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unto them and their dull rent maggots,
As long and short flocks are in faggots. Hudibras.
She pricked his maggot, and touched him in the tender point, then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.

MAGGOTTINESS, n. f. [from maggotty.]
The state of abounding with maggots.
MAGGOTTY, adj. [from maggot.]
1. Full of maggots.
2. Capricious; whimsical. A low word.
To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggoty unfettered head, is as ridiculous as to think to write frat in a jaunting coach. Norris.
MAGICAL, adj. [from magick.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.
I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shakspeare.
They beheld navicled the magical flight of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms.
Dryden.
By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cumber, upon her head, the attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler.
MAGICALLY, adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick; by enchantment.
In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the sailing of a rug, magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Cand.

MAGIC, n. f. [magia, Latin.]
1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits; it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick;
yet magick was in general held unlawful; sorcery; enchantment.
She once being loath,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony
Claps on his sword-wing.
What charms, what magic, can over-rule the force of all these motives? Rogers.
2. The secret operations of natural powers.
The writers of natural magick attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse immaterial virtue into the part covered. Bacon.

MAGICK, adj.
1. Acting or doing by powers superiour to the known power of nature; enchanted;
necromantick.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magic lights
Shall raise such artificial sprites,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakspeare.
Like castles built by magic art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear To me. Granville.

2. Done or produced by magick.
And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magic structures rear'd to high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.
MAGICIAN, n. f. [magicus, Latin.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a ne-cromancer.
What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakspeare.
An old magician, that did keep
The Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where the life, makes culdest souls to grieve.
Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.
MAGISTERIAL, adj. [from magister, Lat.]
1. Such as suits a master.
Such a government is paternal, not magisterial.
King Charles.
He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofly; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotic.
We are not magisterial in opinion, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown.
Pretences go a great way with men that take fan words and magisterial looks for current payment.
Elfrange.
Those men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chymically prepared, after the manner of a magistry.
Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew.

MAGISTERIALLY, adv. [from magisterial.]
Arrogantly; with an air of authority.
A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon.
Over their pots and pipes, they claim and engross all wholly to themselves, magisterially cen-suring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new-modelling the world. South.

MAGISTERIALNESS, n. f. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.
Perceptiveness is of two sorts; the one a magiste-rialness in matters of opinion, the other a positive-ness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Consequence of the Tongue.

MAGISTRY, n. f. [magisterium, Latin.] Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c.
and sometimes resin and resinous substances; as those of jalap, scammony, &c. but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of some what, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.
Paracelsus extracted the magistry of wine, expelling it into the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncon-gealed in the centre. Brown.
The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MAGISTRACY, n. f. [magistratus, Lat.]
Office or dignity of a magistrate.
You share the wisdom magistral, priesthoods, Wealth and tributes, amongst you, friends. St. Jon.
He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistry, or undertaking the public offices of state. Brown.
Some have disputed even against magistry itself. Attobury.
Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistry and good government. Clarissa.

MAGISTRALLY, adv. [magistralis, low Latin.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.
What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a liberty to controul to magistry? Branhall.

MAGISTRATE, n. f. [magistratus, Lat.]
A man publicly invested with authority;
a governor; an executor of the laws.
They chose their magistrate
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench. Shakspeare.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects.
Decay of Piety.

MAGNALITY, n. f. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common grade. Not used.
Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown.

MAGNANIMITY, n. f. [magnanimitas, Fr.
magnanimita, Latin.] Greatness of mind;
bravery; elevation of soul.
With deadly hue, an armed coast did lie.
In whole dead face he read great magnanimity. Spenser.
Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in cases of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto watch. Hooker.
They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears;
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton.
Exploding many things under the name of truths, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNANIMOUS, adj. [magnanimus, Lat.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment;
brave.
To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler doing, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton.
In French
All mortals I excite'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.

MAGNANIMOUSLY, adv. [magnanimus, Lat.]
Greatly; with an air of authority.
A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magnanimously. Bacon.
Over their pots and pipes, they claim and engross all wholly to themselves, magnanimously cen-suring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all
piety, and new-modelling the world. South.

MAGNANIMOUSLY, adv. [from magnanimus.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, fully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milton.

MAGNET, n. f. [magnes, Latin.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.

Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss. The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.

It is not reasonable to ask, Whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.

MAGNETICAL, adj. [from magnet.]
MAGNETICK, adj. [from magnet.]

1. Relating to the magnet.

Review this whole magnetick scheme. Blackm.

Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton.

2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton.

3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.

The moon is magnetick of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture. Bacon.

She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Dante.

They, as they move towards his all-cheering lamp,
Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the mantle, resolute breast,
As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Par. Reg.

MAGNETISM, n. f. [from magnet.]

1. Power of the loadstone.

Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature. Brown.

2. Power of attraction.

By the magnetism of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted. Glanville.

MAGNIFIABLE, adj. [from magnify.]

Worthy to be extolled or praised. Unusual.

Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjectives from the multiplying conceits of men. Brown.

MAGNIFICENT, adj. [magnificus, Latin.]

MAGNIFIC, adj. Illustrious; grand; great; noble. Proper, but little used.

The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and glory, throughout all countries. 1 Chronicles.

Thrones, dominations, principdoms, virtues, powers.

If these magnificent titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton.

O parent! these are thy magnifick deeds,
Thy trophies! Milton.

MAGNIFICENCE, n. f. [magnificentia, Latin.]

Grandeur of appearance; splendour.

This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lutes, gems, and gold,
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence. Milton.

Not Babylon
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificent Equal'd in all her glories to inhume
Belus or Serapis, their gods; or sent Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. Milton.

One may observe more splendour and magnificence in particular person houses in Genoa, than in those that belong to the publick. Addison.

MAGNIFICENT, adj. [magnificus, Latin.]

1. Grand in appearance; splendid; pompous.

Man be made, and for him built Magnificent this world. Milton.

It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downwards. Locke.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted bowries I descry, Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addison.

2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to show.

If he were magnificent, he spent with an aspiring intent; if he spared, he heaped with an aspiring intent. Sidney.

MAGNIFICENTLY, adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.

Heauty a monarch's
Which kingly power magnificently proves,
By crowds of slaves and peopled empire's loves. Dry.

We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handy work. Greene.

MAGNIFICO, n. f. [Italian.] A grandee of Venice.

The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him. Shak.

MAGNIFIER, n. f. [from magnify.]

1. One that praises; an encomiast; an extoller.

The primitive magnifiers of this star were the Egyptians, who notwithstanding chiefly regarded it in relation to their river Nilus. Brown.

2. A glass that increases the bulk of any object.

TO MAGNIFY, v. a. [magnifico, Latin.]

1. To make great; to exaggerate; to amplify; to extol.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearts. Bacon.

2. To exalt; to elevate; to raise in estimation.

Greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant angels: thee that day
Thy thunders magnify'd; but to create
Is greater than created to destroy. Milton.

3. To raise in pride and pretension.

He shall exalt and magnify himself above every god.

If ye will magnify yourselves against me, know now that God hath overthrown me. Joh.

He shall magnify himself in his heart. Daniel.

4. To increase the bulk of any object to the eye.

How these red globules would appear, if glasses could be found that could magnify them a thousand times more, is uncertain. Locke.

By true reflection I would see my face;
Why brings the fool a magnifying glass? Gran.

The greatest magnifying glasses in the world are a man's eyes, when they look upon his own person. Pope.

As things seem large which we through mist
Descry, Dulness is ever apt to magnify.

5. A cant word for to hate effect.

My governors assured my father I had wanted for nothing; that I was almost eaten up with the green sickness; but this magnified but little with my father. Spectator.

MAGNITUDE, n. f. [magnitudo, Latin.]

1. Greatness; grandeur.

He with plain heroic magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton.

2. Comparative bulk.

This tree hath so extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest. Raleigh.

Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the last magnitude, that in matters of religion and justice, we create in ourselves, or others, a dissidence of your own judgment. King Charles.

When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heav'n and earth confiding; and compute
These magnitudes; this earth, a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milton.

Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

Conceive the particles of bodies to be disposed amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be composed of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton.

MAGPIE, n. f. [from pie, pica, Latin, and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot.]

A bird sometimes taught to talk.

Augurs, that under flood relations, have
By magpies and by clowghs, and rooks brought forth
The secret of man of blood. Shakespeare.

-Disimulation is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Pearson on Drawing.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie high,
Majestically stalk;
A stately worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All fluster, pride, and talk. Swift.

MAGYDARE, n. f. [magudaris, Lat.] An herb.

MAID, n. f. [from mab, mabgen, Saxon; maegd, Dutch.]

1. An unmarried woman; a virgin.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.

I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes. Shakespeare.

She employed the residue of her life to repairing of highways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidens. Cicero.

Your deluded wife had been a maid;
Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
A maid the rose at the approaching day. Dryden.

Let me die, the said,
Rather than lose the spotless name of maid. Dryd.

2. A woman servant.

My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Shakespeare.

Old Tancred visited his daughter's bower;
Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
Then blest'd her kneeling, and her maids dismiss'd. Dryden.

Her closet and the gods share all her time,
Except when, only by some maids attended,
She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.

A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.

3. Female.

If the bear a maid child. Leviticus.

MAIDENHEAD. } n. f. [from maiden.]
MAIDENHOOD. }

1. Virginity; virginal purity; freedom from contamination.

And, for the modest love of maidenhood,
 Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
 Oh whither shall I fly; what sacred wood
 Shall lude me from the tyrant? or what den?

*She hated chambers, closets, secret noyes,
 And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhead. Fair.*
 Example, that to terrible frowns in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them.

*Maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
 To aid a virgin.* Milton.

2. Newness; freshness; uncontaminated state. This is now become a low word.
 The devil and sinfulness look big Upon the maidenhead of our affairs. Shakespeare.
 Some who attended with much expectation, at their first appearing have flamed the maidenhead of their credit with some negligent performance.

*Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no joy's maidenhead,
 Then spousal rites pre-judge the marriage-bed.* Crashaw.

MAIDENLIP. n. f. [lappago.] An herb.

MAIDENLY. adj. [maiden and like.] Like a maid; gentle, modest, timorous, decent.

'Tis not maidenly;
 Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it. Shakespeare.
 You virtuous sis, and bashful fool! must you be blushing? what a maidenly man at arms are you become!

MAIDHOOD. n. f. [from maid.] Virginity.
 By maidhood, honour, and every thing,
 I love thee. Shakespeare.

MAIDMARIAN. n. f. [puer ludius, Lat.] A kind of dance, so called from a buffoon dressed like a man, who plays tricks to the populace.

A set of morrice-dancers danced a maidmarian with a tabor and pipe. Temple.

MAIDPALE. adj. [maid and pale.] Pale like a sick virgin.
 Change the complexion of her maidpale peace
 To scarlet indignation. Shakespeare.

MAIDSERVANT. n. f. A female servant.
 It is perfectly right what you say of the indifference in common friends, whether we are sick or well; the very maidservants in a family have the same notion. Swift.

MAJESTICAL. } adj. [from majesty.]

MAJESTICK. }

1. August; having dignity; grand; imperial; regal; great of appearance.
 They made a doubt
 Presence majestical would put him out:
 For, quoth the king, an angel shall thou see,
 Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously. Shakespeare.

Get the start of the majestick world,
 And bear the palm alone. Shakespeare.
 We do it wrong, being to majestical,
 To offer it the show of violence. Shakespeare.

In his face
 Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestick grace. Denham.

A royal robe he wore with graceful pride,
 Embroider'd sandals glitter'd as he trod,
 And forth he mov'd, majestick as a god. Pope.

2. Stately; pompous; splendid.
 It was no mean thing which he purposed; to perform a work to majestical and stately was no small charge. Hooker.

MAI

3. Sublime; elevated; lofty.
 Which passage does not only argue an infinite abundance, both of aptitudinal materials, but likewise of magnificent and majestic desires in every common person. Wotton.

The least portions must be of the epick kind; all must be grave, majestic, and sublime. Dryden.

MAJESTICALLY. adv. [from majestical.]
 With dignity; with grandeur.

From Italy a wand'ring ray
 Of moving light illuminates the day;
 Northward she bends, majestically bright,
 And here she fixes her imperial light. Grubbiere.

So have I seen in black and white,
 A parting thing, a magpie light,
 Majestically stalk;
 A stately worthles animal,
 That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
 All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.

MAJESTY. n. f. [majestas, Latin.]

1. Dignity; grandeur; greatness of appearance; an appearance awful and solemn.

The voice of the Lord is full of majesty. Psalms.
 The lord reigneth; he is clothed with majesty. Psalms.

Amidst
 Thick clouds and dark, doth Heav'n's all-ruling
 Sire

Chuse to reside, his glory unobscur'd,
 And with the majesty of darkness round
 Covers his throne. Milton.

Great, without pride, in sober majesty. Pope.

 The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
 The next in majesty. Dryden.

4. The title of kings and queens.
 Most royal majesty,
 I crave no more than what your highness offer'd,
 Nor will you tender less. Shakespeare.

I have a garden opens to the sea,
 From whence I can your majesty convey To some high friend. Waller.

He, who had been always believed a creature of the queen, visited her majesty but once in six weeks. Clarendon.

I walk in awful state above
 The majesty of heaven. Dryden.

MAIL. n. f. [maille, Fr. maglia, Ital. from maille, the mesh of a net. Skinner.]

1. A coat of steel network worn for defence.
 Being advised to wear a privy coat, the duke gave this answer, That against any popular fury, a shirt of mail would be but a silly defence. Wotton.

2. Any armour.
 We strip the lobster of his scarlet mail. Gay.
 Some shirts of mail, some coats of plate put on,
 Some don'd a curcase, some a corset bright. Fairfax.
 Some wore a coat-armour, imitating scale,
 And next their skin were stubborn shirts of mail;
 Some wore a breast-plate. Dryden.

3. A postman's bundle; a bag. [male, mallette, Fr.]

To MAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

by loss of a limb: originally written from the French mayhem.

You wrought to me a legate, by which power
 You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shakespeare.
 The multitude wonder'd when they saw the dumb to speak, the maim'd to be whole, and the lame to walk; and they glorified God. Matthew.

MAIM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Privation of some essential part; lameness, produced by a wound or amputation.

Surely there is more cause to fear, lest the want thereof be a main, than the use a blemish. Hooker.
 Humphry duke of Gloucester, fierce himself,
 That tears to shew'd a main; two pulls at once;
 A lady hamstr'd, and a limb lost out! Shakespeare.

2. Injury; mischief.

Not to deep a main,
 As to be cast forth in the common air,
 Have I deserved. Shakespeare.

3. Essential defect.
 A noble author esteems it to be a main in history, that the acts of parliament should not be revised. Hanward.

MAIN. adj. [magne, old Fr. magnus, Lat.]

1. Principal; chief; leading.

In every grand or main publick duty which God requir'd of his church, there is, besides that matter and form wherein the essence thereof consisteth, a certain outward fashion, whereby the same is in decent manner adumbr'd. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times deceased;
 The which observ'd a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life. Shakespeare.

He is superfluous grown of late,
 Quite from the main opinion he had once
 Of fantasy, of dromas, and ceremonies. Shakespeare.
 There arose three notorious and main rebellions, which drew several armies out of England. Ducies.

The netter flood,
 Which now divided into four main streams,
 Runs diverse. Milton.

I should be much for open war, O peers,
 If what was urg'd
 Main reason to persuade immediate war,
 Did not dissuade me most. Milton.

All creatures look to the main chance, that is,
 food and propagation. Locke.
 Our main interest is to be as happy as we can,
 and as long as possible. Tillotson.

Nor tell me in a dying father's tone,
 Be careful full of the main chance, my son;
 Put out the principal in truly hands;
 Live on the life, and never dip thy hands. Dryden.

Whilst they have busied themselves in various learning, they have been wanting in the main thing. Baker.

Nor is it only in the main design, but they have followed him in every episode. Pope.

2. Mighty; huge; overpowering; vast.

Think, you question with a Jew,
 You may as well go stand upon the beach,
 And bid the main flood bate his usual height. Shakespeare.

See'st thou what rage Transports our adversary, whom no bounds,
 Nor yet the main abyss,
 Wide interrupt, can hold? Milton.

3. Gross; containing the chief part.

We ourselves will follow
 In the main battle, which on either side
 Shall be well wing'd with our chiefest horse. Shakespeare.

All aboard
 Charg'd our main battle's front. Shakespeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Till a king be by; and then his state
Enquires itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.

Shakespeare.

Where's the king?
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea;
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change.

Shakespeare.

He fell, and struggling in the main,
Cry'd out for helping hands, but cry'd in vain.

Dryden.

Say, why should the collected main
Lift within itself again?
Why to its caverns should it sometimes creep,
And with delightful silence sleep
On the lov'd bosom of its parent deep?

Pope.

4. Violence; force.

He 'gun advance
With huge force, and importable main,
And towards him with dreadful fury prance.

Spenser.

With might and main
He hast'd to get up again.
With might and main they chae'd the murderous fox

Dryden.

5. [from manus, Lat.] A hand at dice.

We're it good,
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one cast; to set so rich a main
In the nice hazard of one doubtful hour? Shakespeare.
To pass our tedious hours away,
We throw a merry main. Earl Dorset's Song.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky main make people wife:
That jumbled words, at fortune throw 'em,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem.

Prior.

bills of fare for some suppers. Arbuthnot.

49. To MAKE out. To prove; to evince.

There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out to himself, than the existence of a God. Locke.

Though they are not self-evident principles, yet what may be made out from them by a wary deduction, may be depended on as certain and infallible truths. Locke.

Men of wit and parts, but of short thoughts and little meditation, distrust every thing for fiction that is not the dictate of sense, or made out immediately to their senses. Burnet.

We are to vindicate the just providence of God in the government of the world, and to endeavor, as well as we can, upon an imperfect view of things, to make out the beauty and harmony of all the seeming disorders and irregularities of the divine administration. Stillingfleet's Sermons.

Scaliger hath made out, that the history of Troy was no more the invention of Homer than of Virgil. Dryden.

In the passages from divines, most of the reasonings which make out both my propositions are already suggested. Atterbury.

 That is, to watch her. Shakespeare.

5. To attend; to serve; to wait on as a man or servant.

Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels: I was never mann'd with agate till now. Shakespeare.

They chid their husbands land
 In derisions, and are mann'd
 With ten cupricks in their chamber, Lying for the spirit of amber. Ben Jonson.

6. To direct in hostility; to point; to aim.

Obsolete.
 Man but a rash against Othello's breast,
 And he retires. Shakespeare.

MANACLES. n. s. [manicles, Fr. manica, from manus, Lat.] Chain for the hands;
 shackles.

For my sake wear this glove;
 It is a manacle of love. Shakespeare.

Thou
 Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
 With manacles along our streets. Shakespeare.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand. Ecclesiasticus.

The law good men count their ornament and protection; others, their manacles and oppression.
King Charles.

To MANACLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

manage his protestant subjects in the country, he made over his principality to France. Addison.

To MANAGE. v. n. To superintend affairs;
 to transact.

Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
 What their unerring wisdom fees thee want. Dryd.

MANAGE. n. s. [mesnage, menage, Fr.]

1. Conduct; administration.

To him put
 The manage of my state. Shakespeare.
 This might have been prevented,
 With very easy arguments of love,
 Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
 With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakespeare.

For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
 Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
 Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shak.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon.

The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South.

2. Use; instrumentality.

To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped; for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.

3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers
 I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,

I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. Morc's Dialogues.

MANCHINEEL tree. n. f. [mancanilla, Lat.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West Indies, and grows to the size of an oak: its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun; for it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should fly into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippin; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature; cattle never shelter themselves, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Miller.

To MANCIPATE. v. a. [mancipo, Lat.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

M A N

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the methods, which are in themselves more variable, and less circumscribed to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hall.

MANDRAKE. n. f. [mandragoras, Latin; mandragore, French.] A plant.

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the root is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Milner.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been fully celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotick of the most powerful kind. Hill's Materia Medica.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan, I would invent as bitter teaching terms, As curs, as hush, and horrible to hear. Shaksp.

Not poppy, nor mandragora, Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world, Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep. Shak.

And friers like mandrakes, torn out of the earth, That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shaksp.

Tut; tut; here's a mannerly forbearance. Shake.

Let me have That thou thinkest meet, and is most mannerly. Shakespeare.

Fools make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and vilify religion; not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may pollute the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a transgression of our allegiance to Christ. Regis.

MA'NNERLY. adv. Civilly; without rudeness.

When we've sup'd, We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story. Shake.

MA'NNIKIN. n. f. [man and klein, Germ.] A little man; a dwarf.

MA'NNISH. adj. [from man.] Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.

Nature had proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether fram'd not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; she reasons without might

M A N

from a man's countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of womankind, far sifter to prevail by party than battle. Sidney.

A woman, impudent and manly grown, Is not more lust'd than an effeminate man. Shake.

When manly Mevin, that two-handed whore, Astride on horse-back hunts the Tuscan bear. Dry.

MA'NOIR. n. f. [manoir, old French; manoir, low Latin; mauer, Armorick.]

Manoir signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required; and that afterwards this ground was parcelled his land to other men, men, making them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the interiors became tenants to him.

But those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these manors and lands to given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeit'd them to their king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others.

But whoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In those days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site. For a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Covent.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had, Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands Is nothing left me. Shakespeare.

Kinmen of mine They shall abound as formerly. O Shake.

Have broke their backs with laying manors on them For this great journey. Shakespeare.

MANQUELLER. n. f. [man and cpeilan, Saxon.] A murderer; a mankiller; a manlayer.

The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Saunders.

Before the sun,
Before the heav'n's thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton.

Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Estrange.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

A gracious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That let the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.

TO MANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloak; to cover; to disguise.

When brewers murr their malt with water. Shaksp.

I pray you mar no more trees with writing fongs in their barks.—I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-flavouredly. Shaksp.

Beware thoug honour, be not then digned Take care thou mar not when thou thinkest to mend. Falstaff.

Aumarle became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse. Donich.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and murr's business, when great in dependencies. Bacon's Essay.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!
How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing arm
The harmony doth rather make than mar. Davies.

Jealousy, and despair,
Mar'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd Him counterfeiter. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Had he been there, untimely joy through all Men's hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral. Waller.

Mother!
'Tis much unsafe my fire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But murrth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.

MARANATHA, n. f. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St.
Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May't thou be devoted to the greatest of evils, and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Galmet.

MARASMUS, n. f. [μαρασμός, from μαραινω.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance. Quincy.

Pining atrophy.

Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence. Milton.
A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extinction of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Harny.

MARBLE, n. f. [marbre, Fr. marmor, Lat.]

1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat becoming into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain waters the marble.
Shakespeare.

Thou marble heart, so long in pug with breath,
And hither rear'st, unmandal of thy death.
Sandys.

Some dry their corn infected with the brim,
Then gird with marbles, and prepare to die.
Dyden.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; and the parts of the diamond are more fluid, but the parts of the water, being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble.
Locke.

2. Little balls supposed to be of marble, with which children play.

Morbie taught them percussion, and the laws of motion; he teaches the use of the lever.
Arbutnot and Pope.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription: as, the Oxford marbles.

MARBLE, adj.

1. Made of marble.

Pygmalion's late reverie is mine,
His marble love took flesh and blood.

All that I worshipp'd as a divine,
That beauty, now 'tis understood,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he nam'd his wife.
Mallet.

2. Variegated, or stained like marble.

Shall I see in-fetched inscription? shall I labour to my marble columns over my ramous thoughts?
Of rather, though the parent's eye, my virgin mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word.
Sidney.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, detached,
and with a marble cover.
Swift.

To a MARBLE, v. a. [marbler, Fr. from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.

Very well streaked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal distinctness.
Boyle.

Marbled with sage the hard'ning cheese the prof'd,
and yellow butter Marrian's still profess'd.
Gay.

MARBLEHEARTED, adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; insensible; hardhearted.

Ingratitude I thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the tea monster.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

MARCASEITE, n. f.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bitumens, and by others for zink;
the more accurate writers however always express a substance distinct from either of these by it, sul-phureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone; the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright p'd colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it manick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it.
Hall.

The waters of minerals give the name pytoand marcasite indifferently to the same sort of body;
I restrain the name of pyto wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in flints that are ferruginous: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the natum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures.
Woodward Met. English.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per composition, and abounding much in the vessels of the earth, and particularly in marcasite, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with these compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum;
with the vitriol alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals.
Newton's Opticks.

There is a great deal of marcasite in the Testen to a base metal.
Shakespeare.

MARCH, n. f. [from marcho, Latin.] The month of the year.

March is drawn out, and the year is a halcyon year, the month of the year is dedicated to Mars.
Shakespeare.

To MARCH, v. a. [marcher, Fr. for vari-care, Alenage; from Mar, Latin.]

1. To move in military form.

Well march we on,
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd.
He march'd in battle array with his power against Arphaxad.
Judges.

Mucabens march'd forth, and set five-and-twenty thousand perious.
Mucabens.

My father, when some days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica, Went o'er me.
Madison's Cato.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.

Pleasure is such that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march.
Sidney.

Both York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with their arm in arm? Shak.
Our bodies, every footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die. Davies.

Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee,
When clad in rising majesty,
Thou march'st down o'er Delos' hills.
The power of wisdom march'd before.
Prior.

To MARCH, v. a.

1. To put in military movement.

Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendor of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers.
Boyle on Colours.

2. To bring in regular procession.

March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate.
Prior.

MARCH, n. f. [marche, French.]

1. Military movements; journey of soldiers.

These troops came to the army harassed with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and sought in their throats.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
Their marches to begin, and thither tend. Blackm.

2. Grave and solemn walk.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.
Pope.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.
Addison on Italy.

4. Signals to move.

The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly.
Knoles.

5. Marches, without singular. [march, Go-thick; meane, Sax. marche, Fr.] Borders; limits; confines.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pillaging borderers. Shaks.

The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them.
Davies.

It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas.
Davies.

MARCHER, n. f. [from marcheur, Fr.] President of the marches or borders.

Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they sold to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.
Davies.

MARCHIONESS, n. f. [feminine, formed by adding the Latin feminine termination to the Latin marchio.] The wife of a marchio.

The high majesty of the monarch to you, no less showing the nobility of Pembroke, Shakespeare.

From a private gentlewoman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen, and now he intends to crown my innocency with the glory of martyrdom.

The holy marchioness, his wife, followed very diligently the timely preservation of her husband.
Clerendon.

MARCHPANE, n. f. [marchpane, Fr.] A kind of sweet bread, or biscuit.

Along whose ridge such bones are met,
Like marbels found in marchpane set.
Sidney.

MARCHUS, adj. [marchidus, Latin.] Lean;
withered.

A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adusion upon the drier and stiffer parts, changes into a marchid fever.
Harvey.

He on his own fifth pours the noblest oil;
That to your marchid dying herbs assign'd,
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind. Dryd.

MARCHOUR, n. f. [marchor, Latin.] Lean-ness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the exhaustion and marour in others, it much abridgeth our days.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A marcour is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure.
Harvey.

MARE, n. f. [mare, Saxon.]

1. The female of a horse.

A pair of couriers born of heav'nly breed,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth.
Dryden.

2. [from mara, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stupor, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mah, his merry queen, by night,
Besides young folks that lie upright,
In elder times the mare that height,
Which plagues them out of measure.
Drayton.

Mushrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.
Bacon's Natural History.

MARRESCHAL, n. f. [marchschal, Fr. derived by Junius from mare, the female of a horse.] A chief commander of an army.

O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Duinaut next year,
And so be marchschal of Franco.
Prior.

MARGARITE, n. f. [margarita, Lat. marguerite, Fr.] A pearl.

Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity;
among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl. Peacocks.

MARGARITES, n. f. [bellis.] An herb.
Ainsworth.

MARGE, } n. f. [margo, Latin; marge,
MA'RGENT. } French.]
MA'RGIN. }

1. The border; the brink; the edge; the verge.

He drew his flaming sword, and struck
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took. Fairy Queen.

Never since
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
Or on the beached margin of the sea, Shakespeare.

An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood. Dryden.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or filled with a short note.

As would be the case in any other language.
Wit on both sides that the margin is the margin of our knowledge, and the margin of our ignorance.
He knows in law, not text, nor margin.
The edge of a wound or sore.
All the advantage to be gathered from his only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only.
MARGINAL. adj. [marginatus, Fr. from margin.] Placed, or written on the margin.
We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expounded them.
whole speech concerning our Lord's attention may serve instead of a marginal gloss.
What remarks you find worthy of your observation note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review.
MARGINATED. adj. [marginatus, Latin,
from margin.] Having a margin.
MARGRAVE. n. f. [march and graf, German.] A title of sovereignty in Germany, in its original import, keeper of the marches or borders.
MARIGOLD. n. f. [viole mariana.] A kind of violet.
MARIGOLD. n. f. [Mary and gold; caltha, Lat.] A yellow flower, devoted to sup-pore, to the virgin.
The marigold hath a radiated discous flower; the petals of them are, for the most part, crested, the leaves crooked and rough; those which are uppermost long, and those within short; the leaves are long, intire, and for the most part succulent.
Your circle will teach you to draw truly all iphe-rical bodies. The most of flowers; as, the rose and marigold.
The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise.
Fair is the marigold, for pottage meet
To MARRINATE. v. a. [mariner, French.]
To salt fish, and then preserve them in oil or vinegar.
Why am I ty'd to a cook, if I'm to loath
To marinate my fish, or season broth?
MARINE. adj. [marinus, Lat.] Belonging to the sea.
The king was desirous that the ordinances of England and France, touching marine affairs, might be reduced into one form.
Vast multitudes of shells, and other marine bodies,
are found lodged in all sorts of stone.
No longer Circe could her flame disguise,
But to the suppliant god marine replies.
MARINE. n. f. [la marine, French.]
1. Sea-affairs.
Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicritus his attendant-general of marine, have both left relations of the state of the Indies
at that time.
2. A soldier taken on shipboard to be employed in descents upon the land.
MARINER. n. f. [from mare, Lat. mariner, Fr.] A seaman; a sailor.
The merry mariner unto his word
Soon hearkened, and her painted boat straightway
Tum'd to the shore.
We oft deceive ourselves, as did that mariner who, mistaking them for precious stones, brought home his ship fraught with common pebbles from the Indies.
His busy mariners he hates,
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore.
What mariner is not afraid,
To venture in a ship decay'd?
MARJORAM. n. f. [marjorana; Lat. marjolaine, Fr.] A fragrant plant of many kinds; the balfard kind only grows here.
The nymphs of the mountains would be drawn, from that place, and carry them to the city, and there they were sold.

The fight was made towards Dalkuth; which way, by reason of the marsh, the English were not able to pursue.
When they had avenged the blood of their brother,
they passed again to the marsh of Jordan.
Loquonius, carried away with the breaking in of the hostemen, was driven into a marsh; where, being sore wounded, and fast in the mud, he had done the uttermost.
His little bed coucheth in the cooler shades;
Oft, when heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes retorts.
From the other hill
To their first station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended; on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as ev'ning mist
Rise from a river, o'er the marsh slides,
And gather ground fast at the labourer's heel.
MARISH. adj. Moorish; fenney; boggy;
swampy.
It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marsh and unwholesome grounds.
The sea and quagmire to marsh by kind,
Are to be drained.
MARITAL. adj. [maritus, Lat. marital, Fr.] Pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.
If any one retains a wife that has been taken in the act of adultery, he incurs the guilt of the crime of bawdty. But because repentance does consist in the mind, and since Christ's charity, as well as his alfection, easily induces a belief thereof, this law is not observed.
It has been determined by some impolite professors of the law, that a husband may exercise his marital authority so far, as to give his wife moderate correction.
MARITATED. adj. [from maritus, Lat.]
Having a husband.
MARITIME. adj. [maritimus, Lat.] MARITIME. } adj. maritime, Fr.]
1. Performed on the sea; marine.
I discomfited of a maritime voyage, and the passages and incidents therein.
2. Relating to the sea; naval.
At the parliament at Oxford his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched.
3. Bordering on the sea.
The friend, the shores maritime Sought for his bed, and found a place upon which play'd
The murmuring billows.
Ereco, and the left maritime kings
Moubaza and Quilon.
Neptune upbraided them with their stupidity and ignorance, that a maritime town should neglect the patronage of him who was the god of the sea.
MARK. n. f. [marc, Welsh; meapc, Sax.
mercke, Dutch; marque, Fr.]
1. A token by which any thing is known.
Once was proclaimed throughout all Ireland, that all men should mark their cattle with an open several mark upon their flanks or buttocks, so as if they happened to be stolen, they might appear whose they were.
In the present form of the earth there are certain marks and indications of its first state; with which, if we compare those things that are recorded in sacred history, we may discover what the earth was in its first original.
The urine is a lixivium of the salts in a human body, and the proper mark of the state and quantity of such salts; and therefore very certain indications for the choice of diet may be taken from the state of urine.
2. A stamp; an impression.

But cruel fate, and my more cruel wife,
To Gauden's sword betray'd my sleeping life;
These are the monuments of Helen's love,
The flame I bear below, the marks I bore above.
'Twas then old soldiers cover'd o'er with scars,
The marks of Pyrrhus, or the Punick wars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If to their share at least two acres fell.
At present there are scarce any marks but of a subterraneous fire; for the earth is cold, and overrun with grass and thorns.
3. A proof; an evidence.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language is a mark of union.
The Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence pulled into the Adriack, carrying their ship Argo upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography among the writers of that time.
4. Notice taken.
Stand like the torments in a woman's shop,
As much for mock as mark.
5. Convenience of notice.
Upon the north sea bordereth Stow, so called, per eminentiam, as a place of great and good work
and scope.
6. Any thing at which a missile weapon is directed.
France was a fairer mark to shoot at than Ireland,
and could better reward the conqueror.
Be made the mark
For all the people's state, the prince's caries.
7. The evidence of a horse's age.
At four years old cometh the mark of tooth in horses, which hath a hole as high as you may lay a pea within it; and weareth shorter and shorter every year, till at eight years old the tooth is smooth.
8. [marque, Fr.] License of reprisals.
9. [marc, Fr.] A sum of thirteen shillings and fourpence.
We give thee for reward a thousand marks.
Thirty of these pence make a marcus, which some think to be all one with a mark, for that marcus and mancus is translated, in ancient books, by marcus.
Upon every writ for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, an noble is paid to fine; and to for every hundred marks more a noble.
10. A character made by those who cannot write their names.
Here are marriage vows for signing;
Set your marks that cannot write.
Lorenzo sign'd the bargain with his mark.
To MARK. v. a. [merken, Dutch; meapc, Sax.
marquer, Fr.]
1. To impress with a token, or evidence.
Will it not be received,
When we have mark'd with blood those deepy two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have don't?
For our quiet possession of things useful, they are naturally marked where there is need.
2. To notify as by a mark.
That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides.
3. To note; to take notice of.
Alas, poor country!
Where fights, and grows, and bricks, that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd.
Mark them which can't divisions contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them.
4. To heed; to regard as valid or important.
Now swear and call to witness Heav'n, hell, and earth, I mark it not from one
That breathes beneath such complicated guilt.
To MARK. v. n. To note; to take notice.
Men mark when they hit, and never mark when they miss, as they do of dreams.

Mark a little why Virgil is so much so revered to make this marriage; it is to make way for this divorce which he intended afterwards. Dryden.

MARKER. n. f. [marqueur, Fr. from mark.]

1. One that puts a mark on any thing.

2. One that notes, or takes notice.

MARKER. n. f. [anciently written marcal, of marcalus, Lat.]

1. A publick time, and appointed place, of buying and selling.

It were good that the privilege of a market were given, to enable them to their defence: for there is nothing doth sooner cause civility than many market towns, by which the people repairing often thither will learn civil manners. Spenser.

Mistress, know yourself, down on your knees, And thank Heaven, falling, for a good man's love: For I must tell you frankly in your ear, Self when you can, you are not for all markets. Shakspeare.

They counted our life a pastime, and our time here a market for guine. Warton.

If one bushel of wheat and two of barley will, in the market, be taken one for another, they are of equal worth. Locke.

2. Purchase and sale.

With another year's continuance of the war, there will hardly be money left in this kingdom to turn the common markets, or pay rents. Temple.

The precious weight Of pepper and Sabaean incense take, And with purest huffs thy running market make, Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden's Persius.

3. Rate; price. [marché, Fr.]

'Twas then, old soldiers, cover'd o'er with scars, Thought all past services rewarded well, If to their share, at least two acres fell, Their country's small bounty; so of old Was loud and full at a low market fold. Dryden.

To MARKET. v. n. To deal at a market; to buy or sell; to make bargains.

MARKET-BELL. n. f. [market and bell.]

The bell to give notice that trade may begin in the market.

Enter, go in, the market-bell is rung. Shakspeare.

MARKET-CROSS. n. f. [market and cross.]

A cross set up where the market is held. These things you have articulated, Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches, To face the garment of rebellion With some fine colour. Shakspeare.

MARKET-DAY. n. f. [market and day.]

The day on which things are publickly bought and sold.

For that I was, I thought imperial Rome, Like Mantua, where on market-day we come, And thither drive our lambs. Dryden's Virgil.

He ordered all the Lacquees to be fix'd that were found on a market-day in one of his frontier towns. Addison.

MARKET-FOLKS. n. f. [market and folks.]

to patch on which side she pleases. Spectator.

By the honour of my marriage-bed,

Alter young Arthur claim this land for mine. Shakspeare.

M A R

To death when death again would come.
This grave's the second marriage-bed.
For though the hand of fate could sever
Twist soul and body a divorce,
It could not sever man and wife,
Because they both liv'd but one life. Crowden.
Thereon his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.
Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber too.
Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wout to endear affection, could set her sickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained. Sidney.
Virgin awake! the marriage-hour is nigh. Pope.
Give me, to live and die.

MARROW. n. f. [merg, Sax. fmerr, Eric;
fmerrgh, Scottish.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other there is an oleaginous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vessels or membranes, like the fat: in the large bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supple the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break. Quincy.

Would he were wafed, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring. Shakespeare.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body have another: the jaw-bones have no marrow levered, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon.

Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal
With marrow puddings many a meal. Hudibras.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
The point still buried in the marrow lay. Addison.

This flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose, in the middle of which rises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous fruit, in which there are several cells, for the most part bent downward, collected into little heads, and full of seeds. Miller.

And set soft hyacinths with iron-blue,
To shade marsh-marigolds of shining hue. Dryden.

MARSHAL. n. f. [marfchal, Fr. marf-challus, low Lat. from marfcale, old Fr.
a word compounded of mare, which, in old Fr. signified a horse, and scale, a sort of servant; one that has the charge of horses.]

To be earl marshal. Shakespeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws,
As in a list ed field to fight their cause?
Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by.
As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the same,
Whose name was Appetite; he did bestow
Both guests and meats, wherever in they came,
And knew them how to order without blame. Spenser.

M A R

4. A harbinger; a purfivant; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was farr'd, had been but as a marshal to lodge the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

TO MARSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Chamille.

Anchises look'd not with so pleas'd a face,
In numbering o'er his future Roman race,
And marshalling the heroes of his name.

As, in their order, next to night they came. Dryden.

2. To lend as a harbinger.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going.
Shakespeare.

MARTLET. A kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionary, that heaven's breath
Sweels soothingly here. No jutting frieze, Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant easle.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The m's delicate. Shakespeare.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gaze upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

MARTNETS. n. f. Small lines fastened to the leech of the sail, to bring that part of the leech which is next to the yard-arm close up to the mast, when the sail is to be furled. Bailey.

MARTYR. n. f. [martyr; martyr, Fr.]

One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight. Dry.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth then was so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South's Sermons.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered. Addison.

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.

To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue, or true profession.

2. To murder; to destroy.

Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without flench.

He made use of tyros as matches to set Druma a fire.

Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a soul, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use.

2. [from maca, a fight, or from maca, Sax. one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.

Shall we play the wanton with our woe, And make some pretty match with bleeding tears?

The goat was mine, by singing fiery woe. A solemn match was made; he lost the prize.

3. [from maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.

Government mitigates the inequality of power, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects.

The old man has met with his match.

The natural thame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue.

4. One that suits or tallies with another.

5. A marriage.

The match Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman is full of virtue, honesty, worth, and qualities.

Believing such a wife as your fair daughter, Love doth seldom suffer itself to be contented by other *match*es than those of its own making.

With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand, But due portents the purpos'd match withstood.

6. One to be married.

She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the west.

To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be equal to.

No fabled fancies of the world can match The pleasure of that madness.

O thou, good Kent, how shall I live and work To match thy goodness? life will be too short, And every measure fail me.

2. To show an equal.

No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct.

3. To oppose as equal.

To match with their liveliness they presumed So easy, and of themselves made a scorn.

What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,

He wants a crown to puff against a crown
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power.

The shepherd's tender of Spenser is not to be mischiefed in any modern language.

To suit; to proportion.
Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Rose.
Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes.

Employ their wit and humour in chiding and matching of patterns and colours.

To marry; to give in marriage.

I would not from your love make such a fray,
To match you where I hate.

Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her for. Donne.
Them willingly they would have still retained,
And match'd into the prince.

When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast.

A senator of Rome, while Rome furv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king.

To MATCH. v. a.

To be married.
A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blessing to match with some heroic-minded lady.

I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shaksp.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep.

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.
All creatures else are tough unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me.

To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

Matchable. adj. [from match.]

Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.
Ye, whose high worths surpassing paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,

Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop into so lowly state? Spenser.

Correspondent.
Those islands that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no more but in the deepest parts of the sea.

Matchless. adj. [from match.] Having no equal.

This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen.

Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spur shall urge thy foaming horse.

Matchlessly. adv. In a manner not to be equalled.

Matchlessness. n. f. [from matchless.]
State of being without an equal.

Matchmaker. n. f. [match and make.]

One who contrives marriages.

You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hid'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps.

One who makes matches to burn.

Match. n. f. [innea, Sax. maet, Dutch.]

A husband or wife.
I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy match for such immortal wight,
I feel well wote, and mine unequal fate.

A companion, male or female.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Show thy fawning smiles on equal mates.

My competitor
A top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war.

You knew me once so mate
As you; there sitting where you durst not fear.

Damon, behold you breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud;
Here mounts Amyntas, the young cherub play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way.

Dryden.

Let the birds alone;
Go, leave her with her lover, and to play
At sports more business than the business of the day.

The male or female of animals.

Part single, or with mate.

Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral fray.

Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate.

One that sails in the same ship.

What vengeance on the passing fleet the pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mate devour'd.

One that eats at the same table.

The second in subordination in a ship;
us, the master's mate; the chirurgion's mate.

To MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To marry.

Ensample make of him your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see.

Whole prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty.

The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love.

To be equal to.

Some from feeds inclus'd on earth arise,
For thus the mass'd chequer mates the skies.

Paradise is its name; whose fork'd rife
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:

High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wash'd moor'd his little skiff.

To oppose; to equal.

I'll th' way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a founder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

[matter, Fr. mater, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush.

That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.

My sense the 'as mated, and amas'd my sight.

Why this is strange; go call the abbots hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad.

The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds.

MATERIAL. adj. [materiel, Fr. materia-lis, Lat.]

1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.

When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see.

That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers.

2. Important; momentous; essential; with to before the thing to which relation is noted.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature.

Hold them for catholics or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this question, material.

What part of the world forever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Christ.

It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government.

The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material.

He would not stay, at your petitions made,
His business more material.

Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature.

I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds are less material to my theme.

As for the more married faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend
them.

I shall in the course of such a journey, as I have only such a short time to spare, as I have to spare.

In this matter, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others.

Not formal: as, though the material action was the same, it was formally different.

MATERIALIST. n. f. [from material.] One who denies spiritual substances.

He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist.

MATERIALITY. n. f. [materialité, Fr.
from material.] Corporeity; material existence; not spirituality.

Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal indifferent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species.

MATERIALLY. adv. [from material.]

1. In the state of matter.

I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it.

2. Not formally.

Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil.

3. Importantly; essentially.

All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially; as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good.

State of being material.

MATERIALS. n. f. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materiaux, Fr.] The substances of which any thing is made.

The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree.

Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients.

David, who made such rich provision of materia's for the building of the Temple, because he had dypt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile.

That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestos, which being once enkindled, will burn without being consumed.

The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them.

Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a pulace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made
Materials for an house decay'd.

MATERIATE. adj. [materiatus, Latin.]

MATERIATED. adj. Consisting of matter.

After long enquiry of things immaterial in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less material, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial.

MATERIATION. n. f. [from materia, Lat.]

The act of forming matter.

Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiatio even of matter itself.

MATERNAL. adj. [materne, Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.

The babe had all that infant care beguiled,
And early knew his mother in her smiles.

Dryden.

MATHEMATICS, n. f. [mathēmatikē, Fr. mathématique, Lat.] The character or relation of a mother.
MAT-PE'LOU, n. f. [matter, to kill, and selon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.
MATHEMATICAL, adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The east and west
 Upon the globe, a mathematick point
 Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
 And all extremes, are all contiguous. Denham.
 It is as impossible for an aggregate of finite to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Poyle.
 I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley.

MATHEMATICAL, adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-bow, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley.
MATHEMATICIAN, n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathématicien, Fr.] A man versed in the mathematics.

One of the most eminent mathématiciens of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Æneas's voyage by the map. Spectator.

MATHEMATICS, n. f. [μαθηματικά.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations.

The mathematicks and the metaphysics
 Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shakespeare.

See mystery to mathematicks fly. Pope.

MATHES, n. f. [chamaemelum sylvestre.] An herb. Ainsworth.

MATHESIS, n. f. [μάθησις.] The doctrine of mathematics.

Mad-mathis alone was unconfus'd. Pope.

MATIN, adj. [matin, Fr. matin, Lat.] Morning; used in the morning.

Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
 The matin trumpet rung. Milton.

I waste the matin lamp in sigh, for thee:
 Thy image steals between my god and me. Pope.

MATIN, n. f. Morning.

The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
 And 'gins to pale his ineffable fire. Shakespeare.

MATINES, n. f. [matines, Fr.] Morning worship.

The winged choristers began
 To chirp their matins. Cleveland.

By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques; the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whole the reliques are. Stillingfleet.

Thus he should raise his mitred crest on high,
 Add clap his wings, and call his family
 To sacred rites; and vex th' ethereal powers
 With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.

MATRAS, n. f. [matras, Fr.] A chymical glass vessel used for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually tapered into a conical figure.

Protect from violent storms, and the red purpling darts of the sun, your pennell'd tulips and carnations, covering them with matresses. Excerpt.

MATRICE, n. f. [matrice, Lat.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the fetus is formed.

If the time required in vivification be of any length, the fetus will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from chilling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.

2. A mould; that which gives form to something enclosed.

Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodw.

MATRICIDE, n. f. [matricidium, Lat.]

1. Slaughter of a mother.

Nature compensates the death of the father by the matricide and murder of the mother. Brown.

2. [matricida, Lat. matricide, Fr.] A mother killer. Ainsworth.

TO MATRICULATE, v. a. [from matricula: a matrix, quod ea velut matrice continetur militum nomina. Ainsw.]

To enter or admit to a membership of the universities of England; to enlist; to enter into any society by setting down the name.

He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself at that college, and after to matriculate him in the university. Walton.

MATRICULATE, n. f. [from the verb.]

A man matriculated.

Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions. Arbutnot.

MATRICULATION, n. f. [from matriculate.] The act of matriculating.

A scholar absent from the university for five years is struck out of the matriculation book; and upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated. Ayliffe.

MATRIMONIAL, adj. [matrimonialis, Fr. from matrimonium, Lat.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; conjugal; nuptial; hymeneal.

If he relies upon that title, he could be but a king at court, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, though it remained in his queen. Bacon.

So spoke domestic Adam in his care,
 And matrimonial love. Milton.

Since I am torn'd the husband, you the wife;
 The matrimonial victory is mine,
 Which, having fairly gain'd, I will resign. Dryden.

MATRIMONIAL, adj. [from matrimonium.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.

He is to matrimonially wedded into his church, that he cannot quit the same, even on the score of going into a religious house. Ayliffe.

MATRIMONY, n. f. [matrimonium, Lat.]

Marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife; nuptials.

If any know cause why this couple should not be joined in holy matrimony, they are to declare it. Common Prayer.

MATRIX, n. f. [Lat. matrice, Fr.] Womb; a place where any thing is generated or formed; matrix.

If they be not lodged in a convenient matrix, they are not excited by the efficacy of the sun. Brown.

MATRON, n. f. [matrone, Fr. matrona, Lat.]

1. An elderly lady.

Come, civil night,
 Thou sober-fac'd matron, all in black. Shakespeare.

Your wives, your daughters,
 Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up
 The pattern of my lust. Shakespeare.

She was in her early bloom, with a discretion very little inferior to the most experienced matron. Tal.

2. An old woman.

MATRONAL, adj. [matronalis, Lat.] Suitable to a matron; constituting a matron.

He had heard of the beauty and virtuous behaviour of the queen of Naples, the widow of Ferdinand the younger, being then of matronal years of seven and twenty. Bacon.

MATRONLY, adj. [matron and like.] Elderly; ancient.

The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. Ayliffe.

MATROSS, n. f.

Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them: they carry fire-locks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bentley.

MATTER, n. f. [matiere, Fr. materiu, Lat.]

1. Body; substance extended.

If then the soul another soul do make,
 Because her power, is kept within a bound,
 She must some former stuff or matter take,
 But in the soul there is no matter found. Deviot.

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportions to space as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids, are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them; even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newton.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Wallis's Logic.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.

The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted. Hamer.

I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter. Shakespeare.

Son of God, Saviour of Men! Thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milton.

It is matter of the greatest affrontment to oblige the common bulkheads of men. Decay of Duty.

I shall turn
 Full fraught with joyful tidings of their works,
 New matter of his praise, and of our songs. Dryd.

This is so certain in true philosophy, that it is matter of affrontment to me how it came to be doubted. Chrysos.

4. The whole; the very thing supposed.

He grants the deluge to have come so very near the matter, that but very few escaped. Timonius.

5. Affair; business; a familiar sense.

To help the matter, the alchemists call in many varieties out of astrology. Bacon.

Matter succeeded to well with him, that every body was in admiration to see how mighty rich he was grown. Ayliffe.

Never was any thing gotten by sensuality and sloth in matter of profit or reputation. Ayliffe.

A woman was reasoning the matter with a dog, why he should run away from the dogs. Ayliffe.

Some young female seems to have carried matter so far, that she is ripe for alchemy. Spectator.

If chance herself should err,
 Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.

6. Cause of disturbance.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee? Shakespeare.

What's the matter, you dissatisfied rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make your wives rebels? Shakespeare.

7. Subject of suit or complaint.

Blender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

—Shaksp. I have matter in my head against you.

If the craftsman have a matter against any man, the law is upon; let them implead one another.

In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the gods, it would go on the other.

8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you; but it is no matter, this poor show doth better.

And please yourselves this day;
No matter from what hands you have the play.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
No matter which, is neither of them I ye,
From sleepy Othrys' top to Pilus drove His herd.

Plea'd or displea'd, no matter now 'tis past;
The first who dares be angry breathes his last.

9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.

The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Shaksp.
Plato reprehended a young man for entering into a dissolute house; the young man said, Why for so small a matter? Plato replied, But custom is no small matter.

Many times the things deduced to judgment may be mean and tame, when the reason and consequence ther. of may trench to point of estate. I call matter of estate not only the parts of sovereignty; but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent.

It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquit, till they be settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength.

10. Question considered.

Upon the whole matter, it is absurd to think that confidence can be kept in order without frequent examination.

11. Space or quantity nearly computed.

Away he goes to the market-town, a matter of seven miles off, to enquire if any had seen his ass.

I have thoughts to tarry a small matter in town, to learn somewhat of your lingo.

12. Purulent running; that which is formed by suppuration.

In an indurated tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, the matter being suppurated, I opened it.

13. Upon the MATTER. A low phrase now out of use. Considering the whole; with respect to the main; nearly.

In their superiors it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors asleep; so that upon the matter, in a great wit deformity is an advantage to rising.

Upon the matter, in those prayers I do the same thing I did before, save only that what before I spoke without book I now read.

The elder, having consumed his whole fortune, when forced to leave his title to his younger brother, left upon the matter nothing to support it.

Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in horse, but was, upon the matter, equal in foot.

If on one side there are fair proofs, and no pretence of proof on the other, and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof, I desire to know, whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wife man as a demonstration.

To MATTER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be of importance; to import. It is used with only it, this, that, or what before it.

It matters not how they come, but they come.

It matters not how they come, but they come.

If Petrarch's wife did Laura's wit resemble, And Cowley flatter'd dear Orinda's verse; She hopes from you—Pox take her hopes and fears, I plead her sex's claim: what matters here? Prior.

2. To generate matter by suppuration.

Deadly wounds upward bleed, each slight sore mattereth.

The herpes beneath matter'd, and were dried up with common epuloticks.

To MATTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard; not to neglect: as, I matter not that calumny.

Laws my judarick parents matter'd not.

MATTERY. adj. [from matter.] Purulent; generating matter.

The putrid vapours, colliquate the phlegmatick humours of the body, which transfixing to the lungs, causes their mattery cough.

MATTOCK. n. f. [maturo, Sax.]

1. A kind of toothed instrument to pull up weeds.

Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron.

2. A pickaxe.

You must dig with mattock and with spade, And pierce the inmost centre of the earth.

The Turks laboured with mattocks and pick-axes to dig up the foundation of the wall.

To destroy mountains was more to be expected from earthquakes than corrosive waters, and condemneth the judgment of Xerxes, that wrought through mount Athos with mattocks.

MATRESS. n. f. [matras, Fr. matras, Welsh.] A kind of quilt made to lie upon.

Their matresses were made of feathers and straw, and sometimes of furs from Gaul.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate With golden canopies and beds of state; But the poor patient will as soon be found On the hard matress, or the mother ground.

MATURATION. n. f. [from maturo, Lat.]

1. The state of growing ripe.

One of the causes why grains and fruits are more nourishing than leaves is, the length of time in which they grow to maturation.

There is the maturation of fruits, the maturation of drinks, and the maturation of imposthumes; as also other maturations of metals.

2. The act of ripening.

We have no heat to spare in Summer; it is very well if it be sufficient for the maturation of fruits.

3. In physick.

Maturation, by some physical writers, is applied to the suppuration of excrementitious or extravasated juices into matter, and differs from concoction or digestion, which is the raising to a greater perfection the alimentary and natural juices in their proper canals.

MATURATIVE. adj. [from maturo, Lat.]

1. Ripening; conducive to ripeness.

Between the tropicks and equator their second Summer is hotter, and more maturative of fruits than the former.

2. Conducive to the suppuration of a sore.

The Roman legions, and great Cæsar found
Our fathers no mean foes. Philips.*

*4. Low in the degree of any good quality;
low in worth; low in power.*

Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved nor disfellowed of God for them. Hooker.

*French wheat is bearded, and requirith the best soil, recompenseth the same with a profitable plenty;
and not wheat, so termed because it is unbarbed, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain. Corw.*

The lands be not holden of her majesty, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service at the mott. Bacon.

*By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, inasmuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly,
he became able to dispend ten thousand pounds.
Davies.*

*To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;
Call'd from his mean abode a sceptre to sustain.

MEASURE, n. f. [from measure, Fr. mesure, Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

A tailor's news,
Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on stilts, which his nimble haste
Had fully thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shakespeare.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the spaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured;
but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes we know what measure he meant; that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbutnot on Colins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or intemperate.
Glanville's Scenics.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hosker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity; as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, when we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksf.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short
And every measure fail me. Shakespeare.

We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Corinthians.

If else thou seek'st
Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.

Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoic, who had, by obsolete principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Thomson.

7. Degree; quantity.

I have laid down, in this measure, the description of the old world. Shaksf.

There is a great measure of wisdom in the
in the performance of contentment, so that you may omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.

The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and continuation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.

Burnet's Theory.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.

Amyllis locates thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakespeare.

As when the stars in their ethereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Woeing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical;
the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and antientry. Shakespeare.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merrymetings,
Our dreadful march, to delightful measures. Shaksf.

11. Moderation; not excess.

O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakespeare.

Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isaiah.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is ἡμετέριον ὄριον; ὁρίωνος ὄριον, ἡμετέριον ὄριον ἡμετέριον; ὁρίωνος ὄριον; ἡμετέριον ὄριον.

Ἀπολλωνίου ὁρίωνος.

Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psalms.

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards.
Smallidge's Sermons.

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measures, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.

The numbers themselves, though of the heruck measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-dancing feet. Spensf.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end.

The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To measure is to be hardly treated.

To measure is to be measured, Fr. mesurer,
Lat.

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronæ, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shaksf.

I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park gate; and therefore taste away.
For we measure twenty miles to-day. Shaksf.

The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dry.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy power! What thought can measure thee, or tongue relate thee? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.

Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange, that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Spectator.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. Matthew.

that measures.

MEASURING, adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.

When lusty shepherds chrow
The bar by turns, and none the ren out-go
So far, but that the best are measuring calls,
Their emulation and their pasture lulls. Waller.

MEAT, n. f. [met, French.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.

To his father he eat ten she asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way. Genesis.

Carnivore, and birds of prey, are no good meat;
but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh, for pewees and ducks feed upon the same, and yet are good meat. Bacon's Natural History.

There was a multitude of excises; as, the vectigal macelli, a tax upon meat. Arbutnot.

2. Food in general.

Never words were music to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-favour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spoke or car'd. Shakespeare.

Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Corinthians.

MEATED, adj. [from meat.] Fed; foddered.

Strong oxen and horses, well food and well clad,
Well meated and aired. Tasso's Husbandry.

MEATH, n. f. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwl ebrius sum.] Drink, properly of honey.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive malt, and meathes
From many a berry. Milton's Paradise Lost.

MEATHING, part. generally called mizzling.

The air feels more moist when the water is in small than to great things; in the same way sinking rats, that is great numbers. Arbuthnot on Air.

MECHANICAL. adj. [mechanicus, Lat.]
MECHANICK. n. f. [mechanique, Fr. from μηχανη.]

1. Constructed by the laws of mechanics. Many a fair precept in poetry, is like a seeming demonstration in mathematics, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanic operation. Dryden.

The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these, and such like questions. Newton.

2. Skilled in mechanics; bred to manual labour.

3. Mean; servile; of mean occupation. Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not to walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession. Shakespeare.

Haug him, mechanical fat-butcher rogue; I will stare him out of his wits; I will hew him with my cudgel. Shakespeare.

Mechanick slaves,
 With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uphill us to the view. Shakespeare.

To make a god, a hero, or a king,

MECHANICK. n. f. A manufacturer; a low workman.

Do not bid me
 Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
 Again with Rome's mechanics. Shakespeare.

A third proves a very heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanic, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or the anvil. South.

MECHANICKS. n. f. [mechanica, Lat.] A mathematical science, which shews the effects of powers, or moving forces, so far as they are applied to engines, and demonstrates the laws of motion. Harris.
 The rudiments of geography, with something of mechanics, may be easily conveyed into the minds of acute young persons. Watts.
 Salomon was a great proficient in mechanics, and inventor of a vessel which imitated thunder. Brown.

MECHANICALLY. adv. [from mechanic.] According to the laws of mechanism. They suppose even the common animals that are in being, to have been formed mechanically among the rest. Ray.

Later philosophers feign hypotheses for explaining all things mechanically, and refer other causes to metaphysics. Newton.

MECHANICALNESS. n. f. [from mechanic.]

1. Agreeableness to the laws of mechanism.

2. Meanness.

MECHANICIAN. n. f. [mechanicien, Fr.] A man professing or studying the construction of machines.

Some were figured like male, others like female ferrets, as mechanicians speak. Boyle.

MECHANISM. n. f. [mechanisme, Fr.] 1. Action according to mechanic laws.

After the chyle has passed through the lungs, nature continues her usual mechanism, to convert it into animal substance. Arbuthnot.
 He acknowledges nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident, either of which is wholly unaccountable. Hentley.

2. Construction of parts depending on each other in any complicated fabric.

MECHANICAL. n. f. [from the place.]

Mechacan is a large root, twelve or fourteen inches long; the plant which affords it is a species of bindweed, and its stalks are singular: the root in powder is a gentle and mild purgative. Hist.

1. Disordered with melancholy; fanciful;
 hypochondriacal; gloomy.

If he be mad or angry, or melancholick, or brightly, he will paint whatsoever is proportion-able to any one. Dryden.

The commentators on old Aristotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgment vary:

They to their own senses have brought
 The image of his general thought.

Just as the melancholick eye
 Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Paine.

2. Unhappy; unfortunate; causing sorrow.

The king found himself at the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.

MELANCHOLY. n. f. [melancolic, Fr.
 from melancos and cholos.]

1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli.

Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is enulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical;
 nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's,
 which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is pol-itick; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shaksp.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him. Sidney.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
 What is it else but penury of soul.

A lazy troll, a numbskull of the mind? Dryden.

In those deep solitudes and awful cells,
 Were heavenly pensive contemplation dwells,
 And ever unmingled melancholy reigns. Pope.

MELANCHOLY. adj. [melancholique, Fr.]

1. Gloomy; dismal.

Think of all our miseries
 Put as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
 To the renewing of our joys. Dunham.

If in the melancholy shades below,
 The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
 Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
 Burn on through leath' and animate my shade. Pope.

2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.

How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy?
Shaksp.

He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.

MELICERIS. n. f. [meliceris.]

Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cyst, and consisting of matter like honey. The matter resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma, it like honey, meliceris; and it is composed of fat, or a tery substance, atheroma. Sharp.

 Lat.] A plant.

To MELIORATE. v. a. [meliorer, Fr. from melior.] To better; to improve.

Grating meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.

But when we graft, or buds inoculate,
 Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Dunham.

A man ought by no means to think that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South.

Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.

Much labour is requir'd in trees;
 Well must the ground be digg'd and better dress'd,
 New soil to make, and meliorate the soil. Dryden.

MELIORATION. n. f. [melioration, Fr. from meliorate.] Improvement; act of bettering.

For the melioration of such things is yet much left, in this point of exquisite confection. Bacon.

MELIORITY. n. f. [from melior.] State of being better. A word very elegant, but not used.

Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliority above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

To MELL. v. n. [meller, se meller, Fr.] To mix; to meddle. Obsolete.

It fathers fits not with such things to mell. Spens.

Here is a great deal of good matter
 Lost for lack of telling:

Now I see thou dost but clatter,
 Harm may come of melling. Spenser.

MELLIEROUS. adj. Productive of honey.

MELLIFICATION. n. f. [mellifico, Lat.]

The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.

In judging of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grass-hoppers, and want of mellifi-cation in bees. Arbutnot.

MELLI'FLUENCE. n. f. [mel and fluo, Lat.]

A honied flow; a flow of sweetness.

MELLI'FLUENT. adj. [mel and fluo, Lat.]

MELLI'FLUOUS. adj. Flowing with honey; flowing with sweetness.

A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight. Shak.

As all those things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into choleric and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows. Ralegh.

Innumerable songsters in the freshening shade
 Of new sprung leaves, their modulations mix Mellifluous. Thomson's Spring.

MELLOW. adj. [menappa, soft, Sax. Skinner; more nearly from mollis, moll, mellow,
mellow; though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech.]

1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.

A storm, a robbery, call it what you will,
 Shook down my mellow hanging, nay, my leaves. Shaksp.

An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it has a mellow scent, and my taste, that it is sweet. Dagby.

A little longer,
 And nature drops him down without your sin,
 Like mellow fruit, without a winter turn. Dryden.

2. Soft in sound.

Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
 Which with his dying breath Dametas gave. Dryd.

Canomale the with mellow grounds fit for wheat.
Bacon.

4. Drunk; melted down with drink.

Greedy of physicians frequent fees,
 From Lullie mellow praise he takes degrees. Raf.

In all my humours, whether grave or mellow,
 Thou'rt such a telly, touchy, pleasant fellow;
 Hail to much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee.
 There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

To MELLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.

Lord Aubrey Vere
 Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
 Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shaksp.

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
 Which mellow'd by the fleeting hours of time,
 Will well become the seat of majesty. Shaksp.

On foreign mountains may the sun refine
 The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addison.

2. To soften.

They play in the winter bubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not play it again till April. Martimer.

3. To mature to perfection.

This episode, now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æneis, was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.

To MELLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good; till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay. Don.

MELLOWNESS. n. f. [from mellow.]

* Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness

by maturity.
My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Bodley.

The spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mellow mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.

2. Maturity; full age.

MELOCOTON. n. f. [melocotone, Spanish;
malum cotoneum, Lat.] A quince. Obsolete.

In apricots, peaches, or melocotones upon a wall,
the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacon.

MELODIOUS. adj. [from melody.] Musical; harmonious.

Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Mit.

And oft with holy hymns be charm'd their ears;
A musick more melodious than the spheres. Dryden.

MELODIOUSLY. adv. [from melodious.]
Musically; harmoniously.

MELODIOUSLY. n. f. [from melodious.]

Harmoniousness; musicalness.

MELODY. n. f. [melodia.] Musick;

harmony of sound.

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely indited poems, and was further the author of adding unto poetry
melody in public prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of mens hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. 1. Eph. viii.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in sunny cradles,
And hush with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perturbed chambers of the great,
And toll'd with sounds of falsest melody? Shaksp.

Lend me your son's, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! Thomson's Spring.

MELON. n. f. [melon, Fr. melo, Lat.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three feminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Müller.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely: the cucumbers and the melons. Numbers.

MELON-THISTLE. n. f. [melocotus, Lat.]

The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance. Müller.

To MELT. v. a. [meltan, Sax.]

1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.

How they would melt out of my forehead by heat, and liquid silver sweat with me! Shak.
When the melting fire between, the fire compass
the waters to boil.

This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted tastes of brim, it is your mother's fault, who will not allow you a silver lancepan. Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierces the mind. Baird.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.

The mighty master smil'd to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kinder sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden.

Aha! the story melts away my soul. Addison.

4. To waste away.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general ruin, melted down thy youth
In different bands of life. Shakspere.

To MELT. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalms.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And winter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shakspere.

Albeit, they were fester villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakspere.

This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dry.

Melting into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd to find a fight. Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Whether are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal Melted as breath into the wind. Shakspere.

Beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. Shak.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psalms.

MELTER. n. f. [from melt.] One that melts metals.

Miso and Mopla, like a couple of forewat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Denham.

MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.

Zelma lay upon a bank, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought the brook meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney.

MELTLE. n. f. A kind of fish.

MEMBER. n. f. [membre, Fr. membrum, Lat.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Matthew.

The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. James.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head;
a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to the answerer's definition, in which the respondent is bound.

3. Any part of an integral.

In poetry as in mathematics, not only the whole but the principal members, should be great. Addison.

4. One of a community.

My going to demand justice, upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies. K. Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Mules made Me free, a member of the tansel trade. Dryden.

Senius is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country. Addison.

MEMBRANE. n. f. [membrane, Fr. mem-brana, Lat.] A web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obtaining the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown.

They obstacle find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, it spouts embrace. Milton.

Total they mix.
The inner membrane that involved the suppal liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.

MEMBRANACEOUS. adj. [membranaceus, MEMBRANEUS. Fr. from mem-brana, Latin.]

Consisting of membranes.

Lute strings, which are made of the membranaceus parts of the guts, strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.

Great concerts are raised of the involution or membranaceous covering called the silty-haw. Bregh.

Such birds as are carnivorous have a membranaceous, or muscular, but a membranaceous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranaceous stomach. Ray.

Andryne stilluages, which take off contractions of the membranaceous parts, are diuretic. Arbuthnot.

Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs. Arbuthnot.

MEMENTO. n. f. [Lat.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.

Our master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is but a man, and reasonable memoranda may be useful. Bacon.

Is not the frequent spectacle of other peoples deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.

MEMOIR. n. f. [memoire, Fr.]

1. An account of transactions familiarly written.

For our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High sciences of government and plans of war. Pride.

2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbuth.

MEMORABLE. adj. [memorabilis, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I in much delight to recount, on the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Adelphy.

From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have surviving fate to gain,
By study, by books, by memorable deeds,
For that that this desire doth still remain. Daniel.

Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In fight of what he dares not once defend;
I ut safely find that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands recover'd the flying prey?

MEMORABLE. adj. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.
MEMORANDUM. n. f. [Lat.] A note to help the memory.

I resolved to keep one every street, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.

Guardian.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
 We (screw) all o'er with old and empty rules,
 State memorandums of the school. Swift.

MEMORIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Lat.]

1. Preservative of memory.

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
 Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
 And gives memorial dairy kisses to it. Shakespeare.

May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Broome.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies raise;
 There high in air memorial of my name
 Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

2. Contained in memory.

The case is with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memoirs. Watts.

MEMORIAL. n. f.

1. A monument; something to preserve memory.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the Trinity itself; some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all. Hooker.

A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Numbers.

All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage. Hale.

In other parts like deeds deserve'd

Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought. Mil.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

Medals are so many monuments consign'd over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison.

2. Hint to assist the memory.

He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons. Bacon.

Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Haquard.

3. An address; reminding of services and soliciting reward.

MEMORIALIST. n. f. [from memorial.]

One who writes memorials.

I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memorialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord. Spectator.

TO MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.]

1. To record; to commit to memory by writing.

They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the same was supposed. Speiser.

Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorial in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries. Watson.

2. To cause to be remembered.

They meant

To memorize another Oolotha. Shakespeare.

MEMORY. n. f. [from memoria, Fr. memoria, Lat.]

1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.

Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.

The memory's perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may subsist, when their present pasture fails. Addison.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

That ever-living man of memory,
 Henry the Fifth! Shakespeare.

3. Time of knowledge.

Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
 How first this world, and face of things, began,
 And what before thy memory was done. Milton.

4. Memorial; monumental record.

Be better suited:

These weeds are memories of those woe's hours:
 I pry thee put them off. Shakespeare.

A swan in memory of Ceyanus shines;
 The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry signs. Addison.

5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
 Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
 That memory, the warder of the brain,
 Shall be a fume. Shakespeare.

MEN. The plural of man.

Wits live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham.

For men, there are to be considered the valour and number; the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart. Bacon.

He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon.

MEN-PLEASER. n. f. [men and pleaser.]

One too careful to please others.

Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Ephesians.

TO MENACE. v. a. [menacer, Fr.] To threaten; to threaten.

Whoever knew the heavens menace to? Shaksp.
 Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale? Shakespeare.

My master knows not but I am gone hence,
 And fearfully did menace me with death,
 If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakespeare.

From this league
 Peep'd horns that menace'd him. Shakespeare.

What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
 And the god menace'd if he dar'd to stay. Dryden.

MENACE. n. f. [menace, Fr. from the verb.]

Threat.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last. Brown.

The Trojans view the dusky cloud from far,
 And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden.

MENACER. n. f. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener; one that threatens.

Hence menace! nor tempt me into rage:
 This roof protects thy rashness. But be gone! Phil.

MENAGE. n. f. [Fr.] A collection of animals.

I saw here the largest menage that I ever met with. Addison.

ME'NAGOGUE. n. f. [μενῆς and ἄγος.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.

TO MEND. v. a. [emendo, Lat.]

1. To repair from breach or decay.

They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house. Chronicles.

2. To correct; to alter for the better.

The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives of the persons who composed it. Temple.

You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke.

Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
 Nay, show'd his faults—but when would poets mend? Pope.

Thy opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended. Swift.

3. To help; to advance.

Whatever is new is unlook'd for; and ever is mends some, and improves others: and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong. Bacon.

If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum flane of the school, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit. Mortimer.

4. To improve; to increase.

Death comes not at call; justice divine
 Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries. Milton.

When upon the sands the traveller
 Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
 The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
 While death behind him covers all the place. Dryden.

He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
 As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.

TO MEND. v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good; to be changed for the better.

MENDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.

MENDACITY. n. f. [from mendax, Lat.] Falsehood.

In this delivery there were additional mendacities; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die: but the extenuating, replied, Let ye die. Brown.

MENDER. n. f. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.

What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe confidence; a mender of bid souls. Shak.

MENDICANT. adj. [mendicans, Lat.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary.

Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who, out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor and mendicant state. Fiddis.

MENDICANT. n. f. [mendicant, Fr.] A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.

TO MENDICATE. v. a. [mendicare, Lat. mendier, Fr.] To beg; to ask alms.

MENDICITY. n. f. [mendicitas, Lat. mendicité, Fr.] The life of a beggar.

MENDS. for amends.

Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her; and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands. Shakespeare.

MENIAL. adj. [from meiny or many; menial, Sax. or meisne, old Fr.]

1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.

Two menial dogs before their master press'd;
 Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kingly guest. Dryden.

2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word.

The women attendants perform only the most menial offices. Gulliver.

MENIAL. n. f. One of the train of servants.

MENINGES. n. f. [μενιγγες.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelop the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater; the latter being the exterior involucre, is, from its thickness, so denominated.

The brain being exposed to the air growth fluid, and is thrust forth by the contraction of the meninges. Witman.

MENOLOGY. n. f. [μενολογία; menologe, Fr.] A register of mon. hs.

In the Roman martyrology we find, at one time, many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian; the menology saith they were twenty thousand. Sittingfleet.

MEN'SAL. adj. [mensalis, Lat.] Belonging to the table; transacted at table. A word yet scarcely naturalized.

MENSTRUAL. adj. [menstrual, Fr. menstruus, Lat.]

1. Monthly; happening once a month; lasting a month.

She turns all her globe to the sun, by moving in her menstrual orb, and enjoys night and day alternately, one day of her's being equal to fourteen days and nights of our's.

2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [menstrucius, French.]

The disents of the menstrual or strong waters hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the mental.

MENSTRUOUS. adj. [menstruus, Lat.]

1. Having the catamenia,

O thou of late below'd.

Now like a menstruous woman art remov'd. Samyls.

2. Happening to women at certain times.

Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstruous eruptions. Brown.

MENSTRUUM. n. f. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chymists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]

All liquors are called menstrua which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, decoction.

Enquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal.

White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstrua they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent.

MENSURABILITY. n. f. [mensurabilité, Fr.]

Capacity of being measured.

MENSURABLE. adj. [mensura, Lat.] Measurable; that may be measured.

We measure our time by law and not by nature. The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily mensurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks or days.

MENSURAL. adj. [mensura, Lat.]

Relating to measure.

TO MENSURATE. v. a. [from mensura, Lat.]

To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.

MENSURATION. n. f. [from mensura, Lat.]

The act or practise of measuring; result of measuring.

After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate. Arbuthnot.

MENTAL. adj. [mentale, Fr. mentis, Lat.]

Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power
This eye shoots forth? How his imagination
Moves in this slip? To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental light,
That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down and all his spirits became entranc'd.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that effects the palate.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,
Of plack forms, and mental pow'r.

MENTAL. adj. [mentale, Fr. mentis, Lat.]

Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power

This eye shoots forth? How his imagination

Moves in this slip? To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,

Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental light,

That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,

Sunk down and all his spirits became entranc'd.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that effects the palate.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.

These inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and immaterial, belonging to the mind, and carry nothing of these or sense in them.

MENTALLY. adv. [from mental, Lat.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically or externally, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body.

MENTION. n. f. [mention, Fr. mentio, Lat.]

1. Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh.

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity.

2. Curfory or incidental nomination.

Haply mention may arise

Of something not unseasonable to ask.

TO MENTION. v. a. [mentionner, Fr. from the noun.] To write or express in words or writing.

I will mention the loving kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord.

These mentioned by their names were princes in their families.

All his transgressions shall not be mentioned.

Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change

Befall'n us, unforeseen, unthought of.

No more be mentioned then of violence

Against ourselves, and wilful barrenness.

MEPHITICAL. adj. [mephitis, Lat.] Ill-favoured; stinking.

Mephitical exhalations are poisonous or noxious steams issuing out of the earth, from what cause soever.

MERACIOUS. adj. [meracus, Lat.] Strong; racy.

MERCABLE. adj. [mercor, Lat.] To be fold or bought.

MERCANTANT. n. f. [mercantante, Ital.]

What is he?

—A mercantant, or else a pedant;

I know not what but found in apperel.

MERCANTILE. adj. Trading; commercial; relating to traders.

The expedition of the Argonauts was partly mercantile, partly military.

Let him travel and fulfil the duties of the military or mercantile life; let prosperous or adverse fortune call him to the most distant parts of the globe, still let him carry on his knowledge, and the improvement of his soul.

MERCAT. n. f. [mercatus, Lat.] Market; trade.

With irresistible majesty and authority our Saviour removed the exchange, and drove the market out of the Temple.

MERCATURE. n. f. [mercatura, Lat.] The practice of buying and selling.

MERCENARINESS. n. f. [from mercenary.]

Venality; respect to hire or reward.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a religious, believing soul is likely to be guilty of; if few itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of mens actions.

MERCENARY. adj. [mercenaire, Fr. mercenarius, Lat.]

1. Venal; hired; sold for money.

Many of our princes, woe the while!

Lie drown'd, and sink'd in mercenary blood.

Divers Almain, who served in the garrisons, being merely mercenary, did easily incline to the strongest.

2. Too studious of profit; acting only for hire.

The appellation of servant imports a necessary temper, and denotes such a man, as makes his reward both the sole motive and measure of his obedience.

'Twas not for nothing I the crown resign'd;
I still must own a mercenary maid.

MERCENARY. n. f. [mercenaire, Fr.] A hireling; one retained or serving for pay.

He a poor mercenary serves for bread;

For all his travel only cloth'd and fed.

MERCER. n. f. [mercier, Fr.] One who sells silks.

The draper and mercer may measure religion as they please, and the weaver cast her upon what loom he please.

MERCERY. n. f. [mercerie, Fr. from merc.] Trade of mercers; traffick of silks.

The mercery is gone from out of Lombard-street and Cheapside into the new-row and Fleet-street.

TO MERCHANT. v. n. [merchander, Fr.]

To transact by traffick.

Ferdinando merchanted with France for the restoring Roulogion and Perpignan, oppignorated to them.

MERCHANTISE. n. f. [merchandise, Fr.]

1. Traffick; commerce; trade.

If a son, that is sent by his father about merchandise, fall into some lewd action, his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father.

It he pay thee to the utmost farthing, thou hast forgiven nothing: it is merchandise, and not forgiveness, to return him that does as much as you can require.

2. Wares; any thing to be bought or sold.

Fair when her breast, like a rich laden bark
With precious merchandise, the forth doth lay.

Thou shalt not sell her at all for money, thou shalt not make merchandise of her.

As for any merchandise you have bought, ye shall have your return in merchandise or in gold.

So active a people will always have money, whilst they can find what merchandises they please to Mexico.

TO MERCHANTISE. v. n. To trade; to traffick; to exercise commerce.

The Phoenicians, of whose exceeding merchandizing we read so much in ancient history, were Carthaginians, whose very name signifies merchants.

MERCHANT. n. f. [merchand, Fr.] One who trafficks to remote countries.

France hath flow'd the league, and hath attach'd Our merchants goods at Fondrenux.

The Lord hath given a commandment against the merchant to destroy the strong holds thereof.

The most celebrated merchants in the world were situated in the island of Tyre.

MERCHANTLY. adj. [from merchant.]

MERCHANTLIKE. adj. Like a merchant.

MERCHANT-MAN. n. f. [merchant and man.] A ship of trade.

Private have fair winds and a calm sea, when the just and pious merchant-man hath them.

In the time of Augustus and Tiberius, the southern coasts of Spain sent great fleets of merchantmen to Italy.

MERCHANTABLE. adj. [mercabilis, Lat. from merchant.] Fit to be bought or sold.

Why they placed this invention in the heavens, beside the medical and merchantable commodity of callos, or parts conceived to be taken away, might be the sagacity of that animal.

MERCABLE. adj. [from mercy.] This word in Spenser signifies merciful.

Not used.

Nought but well mought him delight:
He is to weck, wife, merciable,
And with his word his work is conveyable.

M E R

MERCIFUL, adj. [mercy and full.] Compassionate; tender; kind; unwilling to punish; willing to pity and spare.
Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people thou hast redeemed.
Deuteronomy.

His providence, and on him sole depend,
Merciful over all his works; with good Still overcoming evil.
Milton.

MERCIFULLY, adv. [from merciful.]
Tenderly; mildly; with pity; with compassion.

Take the true use of those afflictions which his hand, mercifully severe, hath been pleased to lay upon thee.
Atterbury.

MERCIFULNESS, n. f. [from merciful.]
Tenderness; willingness to spare.

The hand that ought to knit all these excellencies together is a kind mercifulness to such a one, as is in his soul devoted to such perfection.
Sidney.

Use the means ordinary and lawful, among which mercifulness and liberality is one, to which the promise of secular wealth is most frequently made.
Hannond.

MERCILESS, adj. [from mercy.] Void of mercy; pitiless; hardhearted; cruel; severe.

His mother merciless,
Most merciless of women Wyden hight,
Her other son fast sleeping did oppress,
And with most cruel hand him murdered pitiless.
Spenser.

The foe is merciless, and will not pity.
Think not their rage to desperate to-day
An element more merciless than they.
Denham.

What god to mean,
Is merciless a tyrant to obey?
Dryden.

Whatever ravages a merciless distemper may commit, she shall have one man as much her admirer as ever.
Pope.

The torrent merciless inhabits
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes.
Swift.

MERCILESSLY, adv. [from merciless.] In a manner void of pity.

His foot mercurial, his initial thigh,
The brawns of Hercules.
Shakespeare.

This youth, though a mercurial, as could make his own part, if any time he chanced to be out.
Bacon.

Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere, more ignorant, and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetic part.
Swift.

2. Consisting of quicksilver: as, mercurial medicines.

MERCURIFICATION, adj. [from mercury.]
The act of mixing any thing with quick-silver.

I add the ways of mercurification.
Boyle.

MERCURY, n. f. [mercurius, Lat.]

1. The chymist's name for quicksilver is mercury.
The gall of animals and mercury kill worms, and the water in which mercury is boiled has this effect.
Arbuthnot.

2. Sprightly qualities.
Thus the mercury of man is fix'd,
Strong grows the virtue with his nature mix'd;
The discrements what else were too refin'd,
And in one int'rest body acts with mind.
Pope.

3. A news-paper; so called from Mercury, the messenger of the gods.

ness to spare and save; clemency; mild-ness; unwillingness to punish.

Oh Heav'n have mercy on me!
—I say, amen.

And have you mercy too? Shakespeare.

Mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heav'n,
Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;
It blesteth him that gives and him that takes. Shak.

Thou, O God, art gracious, long suffering, and in mercy ordering all.
Widom.

Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy for comfort to others:
the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon.

Good Heav'n, whose darling attribute we find
Is boundless grace, and mercy to mankind, Abhors the cruel.
Dryden.

We adore his undeserved mercy towards us, that he made us the chief of the visible creation. Bentley.

'Twere a paper lost,
As offer'd mercy is. Shakespeare.

Cry mercy lords,
That you have taken a tardy sloop here. Shaksp.

I cry thee mercy with all my heart, for suspecting a liar of the least good-nature. Dryden.

3. Discretion; power of acting at pleasure.

Condition!

What good condition can a treaty find
I' th' part that is at mercy? Shakespeare.

The most authentic record of so ancient a family should lie at the mercy of every infant who flings a stone. Pope.

A lover is ever complaining of cruelty while any thing is denied him; and when the lady ceases to be cruel, thence, from the next moment, at his mercy.
Swift.

MERCY-SEAT, n. f. [mercy and seat.]

The mercy-seat was the covering of the ark of the covenant, in which the tables of the law were deposited: it was of gold, and at its two ends were fixed the two cherubim, of the same metal, which with their wings extended forwards, seemed to form a throne for the majesty of God, who in Scripture is represented as sitting between the cherubim, and the ark was his footstool: it was from hence that God gave his oracles to Moses, or to the high priest that consulted him. Culmet.

Make a mercy-seat of pure gold.
Exodus.

MERE, adj. [merus, Lat.] That or this only; such and nothing else; this only.

Scotland hath soldiers to fill up your will
Of your mere own. Shakespeare.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Fugag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my men. Shakespeare.

The mere Irish were not admitted to the benefit of the laws of England, until they had purchased charters of denization. Davies on Ireland.

From mere success nothing can be concluded in favour of any nation upon whom it is bestowed, Atterbury.

What if the head, the eye, or ear repin'd,
To serve mere engines to the ruling mind. Pope.

Let eastern tyrants from the light of heav'n
Seclude their bosom slaves, meanly possess'd
Of a mere, lifeless, violated form. Thomson.

MERE or Mer, in the beginning, middle, or end, signify the same with the Saxon mere, a pool or lake. Gibson.

MERE, n. f. [mere, Sax.]

1. A pool; commonly a large pool or lake:
as, Windsor mere.

Mere stored both with fish and fowl. Cumden.

2. A boundary.

The midlayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but it is the unjust judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, who despoilth amidst of lands. Bacon.

MERELY, adv. [from mere.] Simply; only;

M E R

thus and no other way; for this and for no other end or purpose.

Which thing we ourselves would grant, if the use thereof had been merely and only mystical. Hook.

The external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul. Shaksp.

It is below reasonable creatures to be conversant in such diversions as are merely innocent, and have nothing else to recommend them. Addison.

Above a thousand bought his almanack merely to find what he said against me. Swift.

Prize not your life for other ends
Than merely to oblige your friends. Swift.

MERETRICIOUS, adj. [meretricius, meretrix, Lat.] Whorish; such as is practised by prostitutes; alluring by false show.

Our degenerate understandings have suffered a sad divorce from their dearest object, desile themselves with every meretricious semblance, that the variety of opinion presents them with. Glanville.

Not by affected, meretricious arts,
But strict harmonious symmetry of parts. Reform.

MERETRICIOUSLY, adv. [from meretricious.] Whorishly; after the manner of whorus.

MERETRICOUSNESS, n. f. [from meretricious.] False allurements like those of strumpets.

MERIDIAN, n. f. [meridien, Fr. meridies, Lat.]

1. Noon; midday.

He promis'd in his East a glorious race,
Now sunk from his meridian, sets apace. Dryden.

2. The line drawn from north to south, which the sun crosses at noon.

The true meridian is a circle passing through the poles of the world, and the zenith or vertex of any place, exactly dividing the east from the west. Brown.

The sun or moon, rising or setting, our idea represents bigger than when on the meridian. Watts.

3. The particular place or state of any thing.
All other knowledge merely serves the concerns of this life, and is fitted to the meridian thereof;
they are such as will be of little use to a separate soul. Hale.

4. The highest point of glory or power.
I've touch'd the highest point of all my greatness,
And from that full meridian of my glory
I haste now to my setting. Shakespeare.

Your full majesty at once breaks forth
In the meridian of your reign. Waller.

MERIDIAN, adj.

1. Being at the point of noon.
Sometimes tow'rd's Eden, which now in his view
Lay pleasant, his griev'd look he fixes sad;
Sometimes tow'rd's heav'n, and the full blazing sun
Which now sat high in his meridian tow'r. Milton.

2. Extended from north to south.

Compare the meridian line afforded by magnetical needles with one mathematically drawn, observe the variation of the needle, or its declination from the true meridian line. Boyle.

3. Raised to the highest point.

MERIDIONAL, adj. [meridional, Fr.]

1. Southern.

In the southern coast of America and Africa, the southern point varieth toward the land, as being disposed that way by the meridional or proper hemisphere. Brown.

2. Southerly; having a southern aspect.
All olives that require heat, as kitchens, stillatories, and hives, should be meridional. Wotton.

MERIDIONALITY, n. f. [from meridional.] Position in the south; aspect toward the south.

MERIDIONALLY, adv. [from meridional.]
In the direction of the meridian.

The Jews, not willing to lie as their temple stood, do place their bed from north to south, and delight to sleep meridionally. Brown.

MÉRIT. n. f. [meritum, Lat. mérite, Fr.]

1. Desert; excellence deserving honour or reward.

She deem'd I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty. Dryden.
To common, not more learn'd than good,
With manners gen'rous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And ev'ry author's mérit but his own. Pope.

She valu'd nothing less Than titles, figure, shape, and dress;
That merit should be chiefly plac'd
In judgment, knowledge, wit, and taste. Swift.

2. Reward deserved.
Those laurel groves, the merits of thy youth,
Which thou from Mahomet didst greatly gain,
While bold assertor of resistless truth,
Thy sword did godlike liberty maintain. Prior.
3. Claim; right; character with respect to desert of good or evil.

You have the captives; use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare.
As I am studious to promote the honour of my native country, I put Chaucer's merits to the trial, by turning some of the Canterbury Tales into our language. Dryden.

When a point hath been well examined, and our own judgment settled, after a large survey of the merits of the cause, it would be a weakness to continue fluttering. Watts.

TO MÉRIT. v. a. [meriter, Fr.]

1. To deserve; to have a right to claim any thing as deserved.

Amplify have merited of me, of all
Th' infernal empire. Milton.
A man at best is incapable of meriting any thing from God. South.

2. To deserve; to earn: it is used generally of good, but sometimes of ill.

Whatever jewels I have merited, I am sure I have received none, unless experience be a jewel;
that I have purchased at an infinite rate. Shaksp.
If such rewards to vanquish'd men are due,
What prize may Nisus from your bounty claim,
Who merited the first rewards, and fame? Dryd.

MÉRITO'RIOUS. adj. [meritorius, Fr. from merit.] Deserving of reward; high in desert.

Instead of so great and meritorious a service, in bringing all the Irish to acknowledge the king for their hero, they did great hurt. Spenser.

The war that hath such a foundation will not only be reputed just, but holy and meritorious. Raleigh.
Sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever. Saunderston.

This is not only the most prudent, but the most meritorious charity, which we can practice. Atterbury.

MÉRITO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from meritorious.]

In such a manner as to deserve reward.
He carried himself meritoriously in foreign employments in time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Watson.

MÉRITO'RIOUSNESS. n. f. [from meritorious.] The act or state of deserving well.

There was a full persuasion of the high meritori-ousness of what they did; but still there was no law of God to ground it upon, and consequently it was not conscience. South.

MÉRITOT. n. f. [oscillum, Lat.] A kind of play. Ainsworth.

MÉRLIN. n. f. A kind of hawk.
Not yielding over to old age his country delights,
he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

MÉRMAID. n. f. [mer, the sea; and maid.]
A sea woman; an animal with a woman's head and fish's tail.

I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall.
Shakespeare.

Thou rememberest,
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back

Uttering such delightful harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shaksp.

Did sense persuade Ulysses not to hear
The mermaids songs, which to his men did please,
That they were all persuaded, through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the seas? Davies.

Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid Horace his monster, with woman's head above and fishy extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient sirens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown.

MÉRMAID'S TRUMPET. n. f. A kind of fife. Ainsworth.

MÉRRI. adv. [from merry.] Gayly; airily; cheerfully; with mirth; with gayety; with laughter.

Merrily, merrily, shall we live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shak.

When men come to borrow of your matters, they approach sadly, and go away merrily. Shakespeare.
A peasant of France thinks of no more than his coarse bread and his onions, his canvas clothes and wooden shoes, labours contentedly on working days, and dances or plays merrily on holidays. Temple.

Merrily sing, and sport, and play,
For 'tis Oriona's nuptial day. Granville.

MÉRRIAKE. n. f. [merry and make.] A festival; a meeting for mirth; merry pranks.

Thou art now in the time of merry-making,
Nor Pan to herie, nor with how to play.
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

The knight did not forsake
Her honest mirth and pleasure to partake,
But when he saw her gibe, and toy, and gear,
And pass the bounds of modest merrymake,
Her dalliance he despised. Parn Queen.

TO MÉRRIAKE. v. a. To feast; to be joyful.

With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To mirth all day, and merrymake at night. Gen.

MÉRRIEMENT. n. f. [from merry.] Mirth;
gayety; cheerfulness; laughter.

Who when they heard that piteous, strained voice,
In haste forsook their rural merriment. J. Queen.
A number of merriments and jests, wherewith they have pleasantly moved much laughter at our manner of serving God. Hooker.

Methought it was the sound
Of riot and ill-mannered merriment. Milton.

MÉRRIENESS. n. f. [from merry.] Mirth;
merry disposition.

The title shall give us cause to climb in the merriness. Shakespeare.

MERRY. adj.

1. Laughing; loudly cheerful; gay of heart.

They drank and were merry with him. Genius.
The vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted do sigh. Spenser.

Some that are of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come to be sad and ill-disposed; and others that are of a jovial nature, do dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon.

Man is the merriest species of the creation; not above and below him are serious. Adams.

2. Causing laughter.

You kill'd her husband, and for that vile sin
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest. Shaksp.

3. Prosperous.

In my small pinnace I can sail,
Contenting all the blustering roar;
And running with a merry gale,
With friendly stars my safety seek,
Within some little wandering creek,
And see the storm abate. Dryden.

TO MAKE MERRY. To junket; to be jovial.

They trod the grapes and made merry, and went into the house of their god. Judges.

A fox spy'd a bevy of jolly gossiping wenches, making merry over a dish of pullets. L'Estrange

MERRY-ANDREW. n. f. A buffoon; a zany; a jack-pudding.

He would be a statesman because he is a buffoon, as if there went no more to the making of a coun-seller than the creation of a merry-andrew or similar. L'Estrange.

The first who made the experiment was a merry-andrew. Spenser.

MERRYTHOUGHT. n. f. [Merry, and thought.] A forked bone on the body of fowls; so called because boys and girls pull in play at the two sides, the longest part broken off betokening priority of marriage.

Let him not be breaking merrythoughts under the table with my cousin. Ethard.

MÉRSION. n. f. [merisio, Lat.] The act of linking, or thrusting over head. Ainsw.

MISÉFEMS. impersonal verb. [me and seems, or it seems to me: for this word it is now too common to die methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word.] I think it appears to me.

Alas, methinks I hear her ghastly cries;
Yet there, methinks, I hear her laughing loud. Sidney.

Methinks by my side a royal maid,
Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Spenser.

To that general subjection of the land mesfems that the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impementment. Spenser.

MÉSINTÉRICK. adj. [mesenterique, Fr.
from mesentery.] Relating to the mesentery.

They are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes this chylous fluid, and scours its containing vessels, which, from the mesenterick glands, issue in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Cheyne.

MÉSÉNTÉRY. n. f. [mesenterion; mesentere, Fr.] That round which the guts are convolved.

When the chyle passeth through the mesentery,
it is mixed with the lymph. Arbutnot.

MÉSÉRAICK. n. f. [meserique; meseraique, Fr. analogy requires it meseraique.] Belonging to the mesentery.

It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the mesericks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the sieve. Brown.

The most subtle part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves, into the meserick veins. Arbutnot.

MESH. n. f. [masche, Dutch; mache, old Fr. it was therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mashe.] The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.

The drawers hang square nets athwart the tide, through which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave may be hind entangled in the meshes. Carew.

Such a hire is meddled the youth, to skip o'er the riches of good counsel the cripple. Shakespeare.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With tangle of clutches to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.

With all their mouths the nerves the spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink;
These all the channel'd fibres, ev'ry way,
For motion and sensation, still convey;
The crassest portion of th' arterial blood,
By the close structure of the parts withstood,
Whole narrow meshes stop the grosser flood. Blackmore.

TO MESH. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to ensnare.

Thy flies by silence mesh in her hair,
By the bright radiance thrown From her clear eyes, ric's jewels were,
They to like diamond shone. Drayton.

MESHY. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of network.

Some build his house, but thence his issue harp,
Some make his meshy bed, but leave his rest. Carew.

Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat
Their idle wings. Thomson.

MES

MESLIN. n. f. [from mesler, Fr. to mix; or rather corruptedly pronounced for miscellane. See MASLIN.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of old dissimilitude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hooker.

If worke for the thrifler ye mind for to have, Of wheat and of meslin unthreshed go have. Tusser.
MESOLEUCYS. n. f. [μεσολεύς.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Diet.

MESOLOGARITHMS. n. f. [μεσολογία, λόγος, and ἀριθμός.] The logarithms of the colines and tangents, so denominated by Kepler. Harris.

MESOMELAS. n. f. [μεσόμελος.] A precious stone with a black vein parting every colour in the middle. Bailey.

MESPRIS. n. f. [probably misprinted for mesprise; mespris, Fr.] Contempt; scorn. Maimon was much displeas'd, yet not he chose But bear the rigour of his bold mespris. And thence him forward led, him further to entice. Spenser.

MESS. n. f. [mes, old French; messio, Italian; missus, Latin; mes, Gothic; mere, Saxon, a dish.] A dish; a quantity of food sent to table together. The bounteous hufwife nature, on each bush Lays her full mes before you. Shakespeare.

Now your traveller, He and his toothpick at my worship's mes. Shakespeare.

From him he next received it thick or thin, As pure a mes almost as it came in. Pope.

TO MESS. v. n. To eat; to feed.

MESSAGE. n. f. [message, Fr.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.

She doth display The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight, Through which her words to wife do make their way.

To bear the message of her gentle spirit. Spenser.
May one, that is a herald and a prince, Do a fair message to his kingly ears? Shakespeare.

She is fair, and, fairer than that word, Of wondrous virtues; sometimes from her eyes I did receive fair speechlets messages. Shakespeare.

Gently hath thou told Thy message, which might die in telling wound, And in performing end us. Milton.

Let the mind be low, his interest inconsiderable, the world will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger. South.

The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd; 'Twas to be wish'd and hop'd, but sense believ'd. Dryden.

MESSENGER. n. f. [messager, Fr.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; a harbinger; a forerunner.

Came running in, which like a man dismaid, A messenger with letters, which his message said. Spenser.

Yon grey lines, That set the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakespeare.
The Earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw, and yet thought not fit to say for an answer. Clarendon.

MET

Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.

MESSIAH. n. f. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.

Great and public opposition the magistrates made against Jesus, the man of Nazareth, when he appeared as the Messiah. Watts.

It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone. Sharp.

METACARPUS. n. f. [μετακάρπιον.] In anatomy, a bone of the arm made up of four bones, which are joined to the fingers. Diet.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis; as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Weyman.

METAL. n. f. [metal, Fr. metallum, Lat.]

1. A firm, heavy, and hard substance, opaque, fusible by fire, and concreting again when cold into a solid body, such as it was before, which is malleable under the hammer, and is of a bright glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver, to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi-metals. Hill.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fusing metals, that the melted metal run not out. Mason.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle.

Being glad to find their companions had so much mettle, after a long debate the major part carried it. Cleaveland.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal he prepar'd, Either to give blows or to ward; Courage and duel both of great force, Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hudibras.

MET

METALEPSIS. n. f. [μετάληψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.

METALLICAL. } adj. [from metallum,
METALLICK. } Lat. metallique, Fr.] Partaking of metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The ancients observing that material a kind of metallical nature, or fusibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost. Wotton.
The lofty lines abound with endless store Of mineral treasure, and metallick ore. Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Lat.] Producing metals. Diet.

METALLINE. adj. [from metal.]

1. Impregnated with metal. Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into Smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.

2. Consisting of metal. Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interspersed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

METALLIST. n. f. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; one skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fusing metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Mason.

TO METAMORPHOSE. v. a. [metamorphosis, Fr. μεταμορφώω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me; Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shakespeare.
They became degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Darwin.

The impossibility to conceive of great a price and favourite so suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers, with no train, was enough to make any man unbeliever in five senses. Wotton.

From such rude principles our form began, And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [metamorphosis, Fr. μεταμόρφωσις.]

1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.
Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Governance of the Tongue.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden.

There are probable machines in epic poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Broome.

2. It is applied by Harvey to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm, and the like. Quincy.

METAPHOR. n. f. [metaphore, Fr. μετάφορα.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put; as, he bridles his anger; he deadens the sound; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprised in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopœa delights.

One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

METAPHORICAL. } adj. [metaphorice, Fr. metaphor.] Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were to continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use.

METAPHRASIS. n. f. [μεταφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase.

METAPHRASIST. n. f. [metaphrasiste, Fr. μεταφραστής.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICK. } 1. Verbed in metaphysicks; relating to metaphysicks.

2. In Shakspeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

He thee bither,
To chafise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal.

METAPHYSICK. } n. f. [metaphysique, Fr. μεταφυσικόν.]

METAPHYSICKS. } Ontology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematics and the metaphysicks,
Fail to them as you find your stomach serves you.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say the tortures with as quaint a vex Physicians.

It might be caused by intromission, or receiving it,
the form of contrary species should be received consistently together, which, how absurd it is, Aristotle shows in his metaphysicks.

See physick beg the Stagyrte's defence!

See metaphysicks call for aid on logic!
The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign.

METAPLASM. n. f. [μεταπλάσμος.] A figure in rhetoric, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order.

METASTASIS. n. f. [μεταστάσις.] Translation or removal.

He disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut out only so much of the foot as is diseased.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μέτα and ταρσός.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μεταθέσις.] A transposition.

TO METE. v. a. [metior, Lat.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth.

MET

To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure therewith to mete it.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun
Mets out, when every daily round is run.

METEWAND. } n. f. [mete and wand, or METEYARD.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

A true touchstone, a sure metewand lieth before their eyes.
Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteyards, in weight, or in measure.

TO METEMPSYCHOSE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of sufferers after their death, I am apt to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. n. f. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of brutes, most suitable unto then human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan.

METEOR. n. f. [metεορε, Fr. météore.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he of red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in his case,
Of his he ut's meteors shining in his face?
She began to cast with herself from what coast
this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland, for there had the like meteor strong influence before.

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whole matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene.
Why was I said the meteor of the world,
Hurl'd in the flames, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod on by Cæsar?

O poet thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's fate too high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rave, and die.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Others are considerable in meteorological divinity.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies.

METEOROLOGIST. n. f. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologist's office, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creature, there is a notable correspondence.

METEOROLOGY. n. f. [μετεωρολογία and λόγος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In annuals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather.
METEOROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the ether's hill
To their first station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gilding meteorous, as evening mist Rise from a river.

METER. n. f. [from mete.] A measurer; as, a coat-meter, a land-meter.

METHYGLIN. n. f. [meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, to glue, Minshew; or meddyg, a physician, and glyn, drink, because it is a medicinal drink.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

MET

White-banded mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.

—Nay then two teys; and if you grow to nice,
Methylin, wort, and malmsey.

T' ally the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new methylin join.

METHINKS. verb. imperfect. [me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. I think; it seems to me; methinks. See MEANS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise methinks.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praise of the good and virtuous.

It chooseth out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her.

METHOD. n. f. [methode, Fr. méthode.] The placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end.

To be wherein the harm which they feel cou-sisteth, the seeds from which it springs, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill, the study whereof is full of toil; and the practice beset with difficulties.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your discourse to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your brains.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools.
Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain.

METHODOICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author.

Let me appear, great sir, I pray,
Methodical in what I say.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories.

METHODOICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To beca methodically, I should upon you travel;
for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object.

All the rules of painting are methodical, concisely, and clearly delivered in the treatise.

TO METHODISE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolved his onrapt vengeance to defer,
The royal spy return'd again unben,

To brood in prison on his gather'd spleen,
And methode revenge.

The man who does not know how to methodise his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodised and explained, in the works of a good critic.

Those tales of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature's methods d. Pope

METHODIST. n. f. [from method.]

1. A physician who practices by theory.

Our wisest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several countenances and disquisitions. Boyle

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterit of methinks.
[See METHINKS and MISSEMS.] I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methink'd, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from missem's.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat hailing at his cruel prey Shakspere.
Since I thought

By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly'd all my heart,
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy feed shall bruise our foe." Milton

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted still, Milton

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden

METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.]
Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metonymi-
cal.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle

METONYMY. n. f. [metonymie, Fr.
μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which, by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson

METOPOSCOPY. n. f. [metoposcopia, Fr.
μετωπιοσκοπία and σκόπος.] The study of phy-siognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. f. [metrum, Lat. μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose.
Aphom's Schoolmaster

Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
To laugh at lords. Pope

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Lat. metrique, French.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.
2. Consisting of verses; as, metrical precepts.

METROPOLIS. n. f. [metropolis, Lat.
metropole, Fr. μάτηρ and πολις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glitt'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milt.
Reduc'd in careful watch
Round their metropole. Milton's Paradise Lost

We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metro- polis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town.
Addison on Italy

METROPOLITAN. n. f. [metropolitanus, Lat.] A bishop of the mother church;
an archbishop.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon

METROPOLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

Then patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forsaken to meditate metropolitan bishops. Raleigh

METROPOLITICAL. adj. [from metropolis.]
Chief or principal of cities.

He bearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitcal city of Strim. Knot

METTLE. n. f. [corrupted from metal, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spiriteliness; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shaksp

I had rather go with six priests than six knights: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shaksp

'Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditions. Hayward's Edward vi

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon

'His more to guide than spur the mule's speed;
Refrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courier, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope

2. Substance: this at least should be mettal.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shaksp

METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mettal'd dance
Saw you never. Ben Jonson

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled fowls, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison

METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.]
Spiritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy;

fiery; courageous.
Their force differs fr. m. true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler

METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.]
With spiriteliness.

MEW. n. f. [meu, French.]

1. A cage; an enclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome meu,
Where the all day did hide her hated brow. Spenser

There then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron meus,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shews. Spenser

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dusty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret meus,
And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhead. Fair

2. [map, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.
Among the first sort we reckon coots, sandelugs; and meus. Carew

The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the meus in triumph ride. Dryden

To MEW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to enclose.

He in dark corners meu'd,
Mutter'd of unitters as their books then shew'd. Hub

Why should you fears, which, as they say attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to meu up
Your tender kinsman. Shakspere

Tair Hermis, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice.

You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be so finely cloister meu'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakspere

More pity that the eagle should be meu'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shaksp

Feign them sick,
Close meu'd in their segans, for fear of air. Dry

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life meu him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Lacke

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their agies, meuings, casting, and renovation of their feathers. Walton

The tun hath meu'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty deslac'd the royal stamp. Cleveland

Some times the moon had meu'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsupply'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabe in fields afford her needful rest. Dryden

3. [mauler, Fr.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will meu, the dog will have his day. Shaksp

They are not improvable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to meu, nor a cat to bark. Grew

To MEWL. v. n. [mauler, Fr.] To squall as a child.

The infant
*Meu*ling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shaksp

MEZERION. n. f. A species of spurge laurel.

Mezerion is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and influences the mouth and throat. Hull

MEZZOTINTO. n. f. [Italian.] A kind of gravure, so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted: it is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT. adv. Mingled. Obsolete.

The salt Meidway, that trickling streams
Adown the dikes of Kent,
Till with the elder brother Thames
His brackish waves be me. Spenser

MISASM. n. f. [from μαζα, inquino, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from disordered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential misasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey

MICE. The plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the land. 1 Samuel

MICHAELMAS. n. f. [Michael and mas.]
The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmas for thirty pounds price. Carew

To MICHE. v. n. To be secret or covered;
to lie hid. Hammer

Marry this is micling malice; it means micthet.
Shakspere

MICHER. n. f. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight;
a hedge-creeper. Mich or mick is still retained in the cant language for an inolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western counties for a truant boy.

M I D

How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage the did the mickler bind. Sidney.
Shall the blessed son of heav'n prove a mickler,
and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked.
Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purfes? a question to be asked. Shakespeare.
MICKLE. adj. [mickel, Sax.] Much; great.
Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This route is rife that oftentime
Great cumburs fall unfout:
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his mick not mickle. Spenser.
Many a little makes a mickle. Camden.
If I to-day die not with Frenchmens rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age. Shakspeare.
O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.
Shakspeare.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge. Milton.

MICROCOSM. n. f. [μικροσμός and κόσμος.]
The little world. Man is called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shak.
She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st
this.

Thou know'st how lame a creature this world is. Don.
As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part;
So Rome's victorious influence did disperse
All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Suiff.

MICROGRAPHY. n. f. [μικρογραφία.]
The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.

The honey bag is the stomach, which they always fill to fatuity and to spum, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter; a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr.
Hook's micrography. Cirac.

MICROMETER. n. f. [μικρομέτρον and μέτρον.]
An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCOPE. n. f. [μικροσκόπος and σκοπεῖν.]
microscope, Fr.] An optic instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed, the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own face, would adright us, the smoothest skin would be beset all over with rugged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.

The critical eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad.

MICROSCOPICAL. adj. [from microscope.]

MICROSCOPICK. adj. [from microscope.]

1. Made by a microscope.
Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all kinds. Arbutnot.

2. Affixed by a microscope.
Examing even the microscopical eye
Full in future swains with life. Thomson.

3. Resembling a microscope.
Why has not man a microscopical eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly;
Say what the use, were finer optics given,
T'inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]

M I D

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.
No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings, Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.
Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,
Unweary'd through the num'rous host he past. Rouse.
2. It is much used in composition.

MID-COURSE. n. f. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.

Why in the east
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.

MID'DAY. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional; being at noon.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush. Sidney.
His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakspeare.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust; Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Add.

MID'DAY. n. f. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though roughly laboured, will be like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.

They never stand, but he or sit;
And yet so foul, that whole as in,
Is to the middle leg in prison. Indubrus.

2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unraveling and resolution of these difficulties are the end. Locke.

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [middle and age.]

Placed about the middle of life.

A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. 1.1.1.1.
The middle-aged support (asking the best), because of the only parts abounding in the blood. Arbutnot.

most next, and the innermost last. Newten.

The outward stars, with their systems of planets, must necessarily have descended towards the mid-

M I D

diest system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a globe space. Bentley.

MIDDLING. adj. [from middle.]

1. Of middle rank; of condition equally remote from high and low.

A middling sort of a man, left well enough to pass by his father, could never think he had enough so long as any man had more. L'Estrange.

2. Of moderate size; having moderate qualities of any kind.

The bigness of a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of middling lungs will easily extend. Greunt.

Longinus preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to any excellence. Dryden.

MIDGE. n. f. [midge, Sax.] A gnat.

MID-HEAVEN. n. f. [mid and heaven.] The middle of the sky.

But the hot hell that always in him burns,
Though his mid-heaven, soon ended his delight. Mil.

MIDLAND. adj. [mid and land.]

the leg.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white fatten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.

MIDMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost; this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree.]
Middle.

Now can to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hanging up behind. Dryden.
Hear him! he repins

At fate's unequal laws; and at the clue,
Which, as it reels in length, the midmost silver draw.
Dryden.

What dulness dropt among her sons impress,

I like motion, from one circle to the rest;
So from the midmost of the nation I spread Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.

MIDNIGHT. n. f. [mid and night. Milton seems to have accented the last syllable.]

The noon of night; the depth of night;
twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early, so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes. Shakspeare.

By night he fled, and at midnight returned
From compassing the earth, cautious of day. Mil.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, when of the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past. Stillingfleet.

In all the dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some windows that were to give light to the truth. Atterbury.

They could not wait till the dog-star had set midnight or midnight in Rome when Julius Caesar was slain. Watts.

MIDNIGHT. adj. Being in the middle of the night.

How now, you fret, black and midnight bags!
What is't you do? Shakspeare.

I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in myriads of beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.

Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
Coarse my attire, and there shall be my sleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden.
MIDRIFT. n. f. [midbrife, Sax.] The diaphragm.

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities; the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles, the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebrae of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebrae of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter; and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff. Quincy.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life. Milton.

In the gullet where it perforateth the midriff, the carnosous fibres of that muscular part are inserted. Ray.

At eve last midsummer no sleep I fought.
MIDWAY. n. f. [mid and way.] The part of the way equally distant from the beginning and end.

No midway 'twixt these extremes at all. Shaksp.
He were an excellent man that were made in the midway between him and Benedict; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling. Shaksp.

Pity and shame! that they, who to live well
Stood so fair, should turn aside to tread Path indirect, or in the midway slant! Milton.
The hare laid himself down about midway, and took a nap;—for I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

How didst thou arrive at this place of darkness, when so many rivers of the ocean lie in the midway. Broome.

MIDWAY. adj. Being in the middle between two places.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shaksp.

MIDWAY. adv. In the middle of the passage.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway. Dryden.

MIDWIFE. n. f. [This is derived both by Skinner and Junius, from mid or meed, a reward, and pip, Sax.] A woman who assists women in childbirth.

When man doth die, our body, as the womb,
And, as a midwife, death direct's it home. Donne.
Without a midwife these their throws sustain,
And bowing, bring their issue forth with pain. Sund.
There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
And treason lub'ring in the traitor's thought,
And midwife time the open'd plot to murder brought. Dryden.

I had as clear a notion of the relation of brothers between them, as if I had all the skill of a midwife. Locke.

But no man, sure! e'er left his house
And taddl'd Ball with thoughts so wild,
To bring a midwife to his spouse,
Before he knew she was with child. Prior.

MIDWIFERY. n. f. [from midwife.]

1. Assistance given at childbirth.
2. Trade of a midwife.

3. Act of production; help to production; co-operation in production.

So hasty fruits, and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwifery of rip'ning flow'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from the unwilling earth. Stepney.

There was never any thing propounded for publick good, that did not meet with opposition; arising from the humour of such as would have nothing brought into the world but by their own midwifery. Child.

MIDWINTER. n. f. [mid and winter.] The winter solstice; December the twenty-first.

Begin when the slow waggoner descends,
Nor cease your sowing till midwinter ends. Dryd.

MIGHT. n. f. [might, Saxon.] Power; strength; force.

What so strong,
But wanting rest, will also want of might. Spenser.

Quoth she, great grief will not be told,
And can more easily be thought than said;
Right so, quoth he, but he that never would,
Could never, will to might gives greatest aid. Spencer.

An oath of muckle might. Shaksp.
Wherefore should not strength and might
These fail, where virtue fails. Milton.

MIGHT and main. Utmost force; highest degree of strength.

With might and main they chae'd the murd'rous fox,
With blazens trumpets and inflated box. Dryden.

This privilege the clergy in England formerly contended for with all might and main. Ayliffe.

MIGHTILY. adv. [from mightily.]

1. With great power; powerfully; efficaciously; forcibly.

With whom ordinary means will prevail, surely the power of the word of God, even without the help of interpreters, in God's church worketh mightily, not unto their confirmation alone which are converted, but also to their conversion which are not. Hooker.

2. Vehemently; vigorously; violently.
Do as adversaries do in law, drive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Shaksp.

3. In a great degree; very much. This is a sense scarcely to be admitted but in low language.

Therewith thou wrong'st thy children mightily. Shaksp.

There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knave,
That mightily deceives you. Shaksp.

An ass and an ape conferring on grievances:
the ass complained mightily for want of horns, and the ape for want of a tail. L'Estrange.

These happening nearer home made so lasting impressions upon their minds, that the tradition of the old deluge was mightily obscured, and the circumstances of it interwoven and confounded with those of these later deluges. Woodward.

I was mightily pleased with a story applicable to this piece of philosophy. Spectator.

MIGHTINESS. n. f. [from mighty.] Power; greatness; height of dignity.

Think you see them great,
And follow'd with gen'ral throng and sweat
Of thousand friends; then in a moment see,
How soon this mightiness meets misery. Shaksp.
Will't please your mightiness to wash your hands? Shaksp.

MIGHTY. adj. [from might.]

1. Strong; valiant.

The shield of the mighty is wisely cast away. Sam.
He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength. Job.
Amusement seiz'd

The rebel thrones, but greater rage to see
Thus foil'd their mightiest. Milton.

2. Powerful; having great command.
Nimrod began to be a mighty one on the earth. Genesis.

The Creator, calling forth by name
His mighty angels, gave them sever'al charge. Milt.

Affected distinguish their times of generation, latitude, and migration, fertility, and venation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Change of place; removal.

Although such alterations, transitions, migrations of the centre of gravity, and elevations of new islands, had actually happened, yet these shells could never have been reposed thereby in the manner we find them. Woodward.

MILCH, adj. [from milk.] Giving milk.

Heroes doth, as ill of midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with ragged horns;
And then he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle,
And makes milk kind yield blood. Shakespeare.
When the saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that the male,
Would have made milk the burning eyes of heav'n. Shakespeare.

The best mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milk, fatten, or keep them from murrain, may be chalk and nitre. Bacon.

Not above fifty-one have been starved, excepting infants at nurse, caused rather by carelessness and infirmity of the milk women. Grant.

With the turneps they feed sheep, milk-cows, or fatten cattle. Mortimer.

MILD, adj. [milb, Sax.]

1. Kind; tender; good; indulgent; merciful; compassionate; clement; soft; not severe; not cruel.

The execution of justice is committed to his judges, which is the severest part; but the milder part, which is mercy, is wholly left in the king. Bacon.

If that mild and gentle god thou be,
Who dost mankind below with pity see. Dryden.
It teaches us to adore him as a mild and merciful being, of infinite love to his creatures. Rogers.

2. Soft; gentle; not violent.

The rosy morn renews her light,
And milder glory to the noon. Waller.

Nothing reserv'd or fullen was to see,
But sweet regards, and pleasing sanctity;
Mild was his accent, and his action free. Dryden.

Sylvia's like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
More bright than noon, yet fresh as early day. Pope.

The folding gates diffus'd a silver light,
And with a milder gleam refresh'd the fight. Addison.

3. Not acrid; not corrosive; not acrimonious; demulcent; assuasive; mollifying; lenitive.

4. Not sharp; mellow; sweet; having no mixture of acidity.

The Irish were transplanted from the woods and mountains into the plains, that, like fruit trees, they might grow the milder, and bear the better and sweeter fruit. Davies.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
N't knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.

MILDEW, n. f. [milbeape, Sax.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the spring and summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the east, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are inticed thereto. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words. Fairf.
The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or campaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words. Fairf.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or campaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words. Fairf.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or campaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words. Fairf.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or campaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon, blasting mildews blacken'd all the grain. Dryden.

TO MILDEW, v. a. To taint with mildew.

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd oat,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Shakespeare.

His mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creatures of the earth. Shakespeare.

Morals snatch from Plutarch's tatter'd page.
A mildew'd Bacon, or Sagara's fage. Gay.

MILDEW, adv. [from mild.]

1. Tenderly; not severely.

Prince, too mildly reigning,
Cease thy sorrow and complaining. Dryden.

2. Gently; not violently.

The air once heated maketh the flame burn more mildly, and in helpeth the continuance. Bacon.

MILDNESS, n. f. [from mild.]

1. Gentleness; tenderness; mercy; clemency.

This mildly gentleness and course of yours;
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakespeare.

The same majestic mildness held its place;
Nor lost the monarch in his dying face. Dryden.

I saw with what a brow you bear'd your fate;
Yet with what mildness bore your father's late. Dry.

His probity and mildness shews,
His care of friends and scorn of foes. Addison.

2. Contrariety to acrimony.

MILE, n. f. [mile passus, Latin.] The usual measure of roads in England, one thousand seven hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet.

We must measure twenty miles to-day. Shakespeare.

Within this three miles may you see it coming,
A moving grove. Shakespeare.

When the enemy appeared, the foot and artillery were four miles behind. Clarendon.

Millions of miles, so rapid is their race,
To cheer the earth they in few moments pass. Blackmore.

glands open. Chicque.

MILHARY fever. A fever that produces small eruptions.

MILICE, n. f. [Fr.] Standing force. A word innovated by Temple, but unworthy of reception.

The two-and-twentieth of the prince's age is the time assigned by their constitutions for his entering upon the publick charges of their milice. Temple.

MILITANT, adj. [militans, Lat. militant, French.]

1. Fighting; prosecuting the business of a soldier.

Against soul fiends they aid us militant;
They for us fight; they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant. Spenser.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the word. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the publick duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in heaven is beautified. Hooker.

The state of a christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained, as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church appearing here in this world, from that part of the family of reprobates. Rogers.

MILITAR, adj. [militaria, Lat. military, French. Militar, is now wholly out of use.]

1. Engaged in the life of a soldier; soldierly.

being soldiers, had been converted unto Christ, and notwithstanding continued still in that military course of life. Hooker.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, yet his tractless weighed down his virtue. Bacon.

Numbers numberless
The city gates out-pour'd, light-armed troops
In coats of mail and military pride. Milton.

The wreaths his grandfathers knew to reap
By active toil, and military sweat, Fading methinks their sickly leaves. Prior.

3. Effected by soldiers.

He was with general applause, and great cries of joy, in a kind of military election or recognition, saluted king. Bacon.

MILITARY, n. f. [Lat.] The trainbands, the standing force of a nation.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia be good and valiant soldiers. Bacon.

The militia was so settled by law, that a sudden army could be drawn together. Clarendon.

Unnumbered spirits round thee fly,
The light militia of the lower fly. Pope.

MILK, n. f. [mleek, Sax. melck, Dutch.]

1. The liquor with which animals feed their young from the breast.

Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall. Shakespeare.

From thy nature,
It is too full of the milk of human kindness
To catch the nearest way. Shakespeare.

parts; not fully.

Justice requirith nothing mincingly, but all with pressed and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker.

MIND. n. f. [geminb, Sax.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very tooth-sound old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakespeare.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a disturbed mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion: as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake:
sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: sometimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences: but as it is used in the proper sig-nification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object, or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be affected as eternal from that which is mortal. Tallich.

I thought the eternal Mind
Had made us mortals. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's outlets, and blame fate
For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by Scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time sin, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God? Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind. Shah.

Being to hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakespeare.

I will have nothing else but only this;
And now we think I have a mind to it. Shakespeare.

Be of the same mind one toward another. Rom.

Hadst thou a wife after thy mind? forsake her not. Ecclesiasticus.

They had a mind to French Britain, but they have let fall their bit. Bacon.

In Adam, not to let the occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton.

Waller coulted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.

He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insufficient to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson.

Suppose that after eight years peace he had a mind to invade any of the possessions, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addy.

4. Thoughts; sentiments.

The ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind express,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

5. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose, as fearing you, it shook. Shakespeare.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter extended with infinite space. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Graville.

6. Memory; remembrance.

The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will there in fet
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton.

We come to know
How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty difference Between the king and you. Shakespeare.

Whole fellowship therefore meeteth for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so *mind*ed still. Shakespeare.

If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. T. Jefferson.

Pyrrhus is only *mind*ed, and I am
Would live to thank him. Philips.

2. Mind'ed is used in compounds: as, high-

*mind*ed.
I am not high-*mind*ed, I have no proud looks. Psalm.

3. We say likewise low-*mind*ed.

MIND'FUL. adj. [mind and full.] Attentively; heedful; having memory.

I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be mind'ful of your admonitions. Hammoud.

MINDFULLY. adv. [from mind'ful.] Attentively; heedfully.

MINDFULNESS. n. f. [from mind'ful.] Attention; regard.

MINDLESS. adj. [from mind.]

1. Inattentive; regardless.

Cursed Athens, mind'less of thy worth,
Forget how thy great deeds, a neighbouring state,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shak.

As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
Mind'less of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.

2. Not endued with a mind; having no in- tellectual powers.

God first made angels bodiless, pure minds;
Then other things, which mind'less bodies be:
Last, he made man. Davies.

3. Stupid; unthinking.

Pronounce thee a gross low, a mind'less slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakespeare.

MIND-STRIKEN. adj. [mind and stricken.]

Moved; affected in his mind.

He had been so mind'stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney.

MIN. pronoun possessive. [myn, Sax. mein, German; mien, Fr. meus, Lat. It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant, and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat;
this cat is mine.] Belonging to me.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare.

When a wife man gives thee better counsel,
give me mine again. Shakespeare.

It thou be'th plain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakespeare.

A friend of mine is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him. Luke.

That palm is mine. Dryden.

MINE. n. f. [mine, Fr. meyn or man, Welsh, from maen lapis, in the plural
meini.]

1. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals or minerals.

Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Wall.

A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.

The heedless mine-man mines only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.

2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support; or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What fiercer hath such a faint disgrace'd? Sid.

Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digg'd. White.

Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale and mine, Attain'd. Milton.

TO MINE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dig mines or burrows; to form any hollows underground.

The ranging flock in stately beeches dwells;
The chubbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining coney's thread in rocky cells. Wotton.

Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists from its surface to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine. Woodward.

TO MINE. v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines; to destroy by slow degrees, or secret means.

It will bat skin and flim the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mewing all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth; but the citizens made a counter-mine. Hayward.

MINER. n. f. [mineur, Fr. from mine.]

1. One who digs for metals.

By me kings' palaces are path'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.

2. One who makes military mines.

As the bombardier levels his mischief at cities, the miner buies himself in ruining private houses. Tut.

MINERAL. n. f. [mineral, Lat.] Fossil body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals. Minerals in the restrained sense are bodies that may be melted, but not malleated.

She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and hug ring
By inches waste you. Shakespeare.

The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon.

Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with allum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward.

MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossil bodies.
By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallic or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward.

MINERALIST. n. f. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shows it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.

The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increases. Woodward.

MINERALOGIST. n. f. [mineralogic, Fr.
from mineral and λόγος.] One who discusses on minerals.

Many authors deny it, and the exactest minera-
logists have rejected it. Brown.

MINERALOGY. n. f. [from mineral and
λόγος.] The doctrine of minerals.

MINIVER. n. f. A skin with specks of white. Ainsworth.

TO MINGLE. v. a.

1. To mix; to join; to compound; to unite with something to us to make one mass.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle art, Concocted and adulter'd, they reduc'd
To blackest grain. Milton.

Lament with me! with me your sorrows join,
And mingle your united tears with mine! Walsh.

Our sex, or kindred, our houses, and our very names, we are ready to mingle with ourselves, and cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts.

2. To contaminate; to make of dissimilar parts.

To confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and earth with hell
To mingle and involve. Milton.

The best of us appear contented with a mingled, imperfect virtue. Rogers' Sermons.

3. To confuse.

There mingles broils. Milton.

TO MINGLE. v. n. To be mixed; to be united with.

Ornate will mingle with society,
And play the humble host. Shakespeare.

Alcimus had defied himself wilfully in the times of their mingling with the Gentiles. 2 Maccabees.

Nor priests, nor statesmen,
Could have completed such an ill as that,
It women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.

MIN

She, when she saw her sister nymphs, approach'd
Her mingling tears, and mingled with the rest. Addis.
MIN'GLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Mixture;
medley; confused mals.

Trumpeters.
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shaksp.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural mingle.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

MIN'GLER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

MIN'IATURE. n. f. [miniature, Fr. from minimum, Lat.]

1. Painting by powders mixed with gum and water. A mode of painting almost appropriated to small figures.

2. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.

The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth this miniature of them. Sidney.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison's Guardian.

The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little phant
I holds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow veins describ'd. Philips.

4. Gay has improperly made it an adjective.

Here shall the pencil bid its colours flow,
And make a miniature creation grow.

MIN'IKIN. adj. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shaksp.

MIN'IKIN. n. f. A small sort of pins.

MIN'IM. n. f. [from minimus, Latin.]

1. A small being; a dwarf.

Not all
Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind,
Would'tous in length, and corpulence, invol'd
Their slinky folds, and added wings. Milton.

2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small sort of fish, which they pronounce menim. See MIXOW.

MIN'IMUS. n. f. [Latin.] A being of the least size.

Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minims of hum'ring knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn. Shaksp.

MIN'ION. n. f. [mignon, Fr.] A favourite;
a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt; or of slight and familiar kindness.

Mimon, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days; I see a number of lads that love you. Sid.
They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions, when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, fluried up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.

One, who had been a special minion of Andromarus, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney.

Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shaksp.

His company must do his minions grace,

Whilst I at home thrive for a merry look: Shaksp.

Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the persons of his minion Piers Gaveston. Darics.

If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estr.

The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,

To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.

MIN'IONS. adj. [from minium, Lat.] Of the colour of red lead or vermillion.

Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and minious tincture from springs that fall into it.
Brown.

To MIN'ISH. v. a. [from diminish; minus,
Lat.] To lessen; to lop; to impair.

Ye shall not minish ought from your bits of your daily task. Exodus.

They are minished and brought low through oppression. Psalm.

Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipp, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon's Henry VII.

MIN'ISTER. n. f. [minister, Lat. ministrare, French.]

1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

You, whom virtue hath made the princeess of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney.

Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:

But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shaksp.

Th' infernal minister advanced,
Sciz'd the due victim. Dryden.

Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Refrains or funds his ministers abroad. Blackmore.

2. One who is employed in the administration of government.
Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are,
must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.

3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.

Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Col.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.

The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station renders their conduct more ob-servable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.

Culcius contents himself with thinking, that he never was a friend to heretics and infidels; that he has always been civil to the minister at his parish, and very often given some thing to the charity-schools. Law.

4. A delegate; an official.

If wrongfully
I let God revenge: for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shaksp.

5. An agent from a foreign power without the dignity of an ambassador.

To MIN'ISTER. v. a. [ministro, Lat.] To give; to supply; to afford.

All the customs of the Irish would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spencer on Ireland.

Now he that ministereth feed to the fower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your seed sown. 2 Corinthians.

The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Otway.

To MIN'ISTER. v. n.

1. To attend; to serve in any office.

At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton.

2. To give medicines.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raise out the written troubles of the brain? Shaksp.

MIN

MIN

3. To give supplies of things needed; to give assistance; to contribute; to afford.

Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke.

He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should let his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South.

There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to our pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little further into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.

Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.

Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues. Smalridge.

4. To attend on the service of God.

Whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering. Romans.

MINISTERIAL. adj. [from minister.]

1. Attendant; acting at command.

Understanding is in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox. Brown.

From offences unseen, celestial names,
Enlight'ning spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign Cause,
Who blest'd the whole with life. Prior.

2. Acting under superiour authority.

For the ministerial offices in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Abslence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects, as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Hogers.

3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiastical ticks or their office.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.

4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.

MINISTERIALLY. adv. In a ministerial manner.

Supremacy of office, by mutual agreement and voluntary economy, belongs to the father; while the son, out of voluntary condescension, submits to act ministerially, or in capacity of mediator. Waterland.

MIN'ISTERY. n. f. [ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.

They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants' mouths that are dexterous in that ministry. Digby.

This temple to frequent
With ministreries due, and solemn rites. Milton.

MIN'ISTRIAL. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.

MIN'ISTRANT. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command. Pope accents it, not according to analogy, on the second syllable.

Thou thrones, and pow'rs,
Princedom, and dominations ministrant,
Accompany'd to heav'n's gate. Milton.

Ministrant to their queen with busy care,
Four faithful handmaids the soft robes prepare. Pope.

MINISTRATION. n. f. [from ministro,
Latin.]

1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.

God willeth him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own hand to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministration to me, intends to do him a favour. Taylor.

Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministration of angels. Hale.

2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function. The profession of a clergyman is an holy profession, because it is a ministration in holy things, an attendance at the altar. Low.

If the present ministration be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterburn.
MINISTRY. n. f. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Lat.]

1. Office; service.

So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any true, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more lacerated than others. Spratt's Sermons.

2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.

3. Agency; interposition.

The natural world, he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of its cond causes. Atterbury.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,
And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow. Parnell.

The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley.

4. Business.

He safe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden.

5. Persons employed in the publick affairs of a state.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and it not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

MINIUM. n. f. [Lat.] Red lead.

Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcinated into a grey powder; this is called the calc of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called minium or miniat; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar; the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.

MINNOCK. n. f. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and mins are originally the same word.

An old's note I fixed on his head;
Amid his Thube must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakespeare.

MINNOW. n. f. [minne, Fr.] A very small fish; a pink: a corruption of minim, which see.

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakspeare.
The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour; his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the spring they make excellent minnow tangles; for being washed wet in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primrose, &c. and tany. Walton's Angler.

The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of minnow fishing. Walton's Angler.

MINOR. adj. [Latin.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferior fallacies. Brown.

2. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.

The difference of a third part in so large and collative an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in minor and less unskilful numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MINOR. n. f.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. Davies on Ireland.
He and his muse might be minors, but the liberties are full grown. Cottier.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.

The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.

A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliff's Parergon.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbuthnot.

To MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.

This doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minimates the object. Glanville.

MINORATION. n. f. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.

Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the lodestone, whose effluences are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINORITY. n. f. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakspeare.

He is young, and has minority.

Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakspeare.
These changes in religion should be said, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no.

Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon.

It there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet.

Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or finality in the exhalation. Brown.

3. The smaller number; as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MINOTAUR. n. f. [minotaure, Fr. minos and taurus, Lat.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus' labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly tracons lurk. Shakspeare.

MINSTER. n. f. [minstere, Sax.] 'A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

MINSTREL. n. f. [menestrel, Spanish; menestrallus, low Lat.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments.

Hark how the minstrel 'gin to thrill aloud
Their merry music that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabour, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

I will give you the minstrel.

—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakspeare.

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sundys.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country shew;
Follow'd the prizes through each pultry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our fears and poets have confest'd,
That music's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MINSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]

1. Music; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the word applaud his minstrelsey. Davies.

That loving wretch that sweats,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsey, the spheres. Donne.

I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsey,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.

2. A number of musicians.

Minstrel spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsey of heaven. Milton.

MINT. n. f. [minthe, Sax. menthe, Fr. mentha, Lat.] A plant.

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint.
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT. n. f. [munte, Dutch; mynetian, to coin, Saxon.]

1. The place where money is coined.

What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakspeare.
As the mint of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison.

To MINT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon.

MINTAGE. n. f. [from mint.]

1. That which is coined or stamped.

His pleading poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unsmouldering renton's mintage Character'd in the face. Milton.

1. The duty paid for coining. Ainsworth.
MIN'TER. n. f. [from mint.] Coiner.
Sterling ought to be of pure silver called leaf silver, the mint must add other weight, if the silver be not pure. Caenden.

MIN'TMAN. n. f. [mint and man.] One skilled in coining.
He that thinketh Spain to be some great overmatch for this state, is no good mintman; but takes greatness of kingdom according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon.

MIN'TMASTER. n. f. [mint and master.]
1. One who presides in coining.
That which is coined, as mintmastery confessed, is alloyed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.

2. One who invents.
The great mintmasters of these terms, the school-men and metaphysicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.

MIN'UET. n. f. [menuet, Fr.] A stately regular dance.
The tender creature could not see his fate,
With whom the dance'd a minuet of late. Stemey
John has assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spectator.

MIN'UM. n. f.
1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter.
2. [With musicians.] A note of slow time, two of which make a semibreve, as two crotchets make a minim; two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver.
Bailey.
He's the courageous captain of compliments; he sights as you sing p. a. k. l. o. n. g. s., keeps time, distance, and proportion; tells his minim, one, two, and the third in your bosom. Shakespeare.

MIN'UTE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.
Some minute philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.
Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of Providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things. South.
Into small parts the wondrous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minutest live exerts
The same propension which the huge possels. Blackmore.
The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minutest channels, and become fit nourishment for the body. Arbuthnot.
In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watts' Logic.

MINUTE. n. f. [minutum, Latin.]
1. The sixtieth part of an hour.
This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd among wonders, and when we,
Almost with list'ning ravish'd, could not find
His hour of speech a minute. Shakespeare.

2. Any small space of time.
They walk'd about me ev'ry minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shakespeare.
The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes
wing'd. Milton.
Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham's Sophy.
Experience does even minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South's Sermons.
Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden.

3. The first draught of any agreement in writing. This is common in the Scottish law: as, have you made a minute of that contract?

To MINUTE. v. a. [minuter, Fr.] To set down in short hints.
I go sooner heard this critick talk of my works, but I rebuted what he had said, and resolv'd to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spectator.

MINUTE-BOOK. n. f. [minute and book.]
Book of short hints.

MINUTE-GLASS. n. f. [minute and glass.] Glass of which the sand measures a minute.

MINUTELY. adv. [from minute.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part;
nicely.
In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that slow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious peripatetic. Locke.
Change of night and day.
And of the seasons ever healing round.
Minutely faithful. Thomson's Summer.

MINUTELY. adv. [from minute, the substantive.]
1. Every minute; with very little time intervening.
What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, rebounding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from the mortiferous a state. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. [In the following passage it seems rather to be an adjective, as hourly is both the adverb and adjective.] Happening every minute.
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach,
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

MINUTENESS. n. f. [from minute.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.
The animal spirit and insensible particles never fall under our senses by reason of their minuteness.
Bentley.

MINUTE-WATCH. n. f. [minute and watch.] A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.
Casting our eyes upon a minute-watch, we found that from the beginning of the pumping, about two minutes after the coals had been put in glowing, to the total disappearing of the fire, there had passed but three minutes. Boyle.

MINX. n. f. [contracted, I suppose, from minnock.] A young, pert, wanton girl.
Lewd minx!
Come, go with me apart. Shakespeare.
Some torches bore, some links,
Before the proud virago minx. Hudibras.
She, when but yet a tender minx, began
To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryden.

MIRACLE. n. f. [miracle, Fr. miraculum,
Latin.]
1. A wonder; something above human power.
Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakespeare.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be taken by me. Shakespeare.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attes-tation of some truth.
The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley.

MIRACULOUS. adj. [miraculosus, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.

Antithetical progression might easily demonstrate how far mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy into six hundred thousand able men. Halegh's Lysion.

Before this day, for thy great name.
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.

Why this strength
Miraculous yet remaining in their lack?
His might continues in these words of magic. Milton.
At the first planting of the christian religion,
God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotson.

MIRACULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous.]
By miracle; by power above that of nature.
It was a singular providence of God, to draw those pagan heathen nations down into those christian parts, where they might receive christianity, and to mingle nations to renew miraculously, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser on Ireland.
Turnus was to be slain that very day, and Æneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.

MIRACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.

MIRADOR. n. f. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shows.
Mean time your valiant son, who had before
Giv'd time, rode round, to every mirador;
Beneath each lady's stand a shop he made,
And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid. Dryden.

MIRZ. n. f. [moor, Dut.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.
He is risen from her lofty flood
Would have call'd down, and trod in dirty mirz. Spenser.

Here's that, which is too weak to be a mirz, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mirz.
Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
I'm Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your dunship out o' th' mirz. Hudibras.

I appeal to any man's reason, whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mirz and water. Moor.
Now plough'd in mirz, now by sharp branches torn. Beaumont.

To MIRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's filse at my gates?
Who fancied thus, and mired with misery,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shakespeare.

MIRF. n. f. [myr, Welsh; mýra, Saxon;
mir, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

MIRINESS. n. f. [from miry.] Dirtiness;
falseness of mire.

MIRKOME. adj. [morck, dark, Danish.]
In the derivatives of this set no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform.] Dark; obscure.
Through mirky air her ready way she makes. Fanny Queen.

MIRROR. n. f. [miroir, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]
1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.
And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the crystal bright. Spenser.
That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.

Let's bright the moon,
But opposite in Jewell'd west was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom music cures. Walter.
By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wondering, he saw his features and his hue
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew. Dryden.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event depend. Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glass to adjust their mien or dress;
an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no less exact, than if the did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Locke.

O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirror of grace and majesty divine. Fairy Q.
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men? Shakespeare.

Mirror of ancient faith in early youth.
MIRROR-STONE. n. f. [silicite, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Ainsworth.

MIRTH. n. f. [mythos, Saxon.] Merriment;
jollity; gaiety; laughter.

To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tripping with a slave. Shaksp.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;

For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest. Shaksp.
Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South.

With genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Mirth men's mirth-inspiring bowl. Pope.

MIRTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.]
Merry; gay; cheerful.

No simple word,
That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us sad next morning. Ben Jonson.

The feast was ferv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.

MIRTHLESS. adj. [from mirth.] Joyless;
cheerless.

MIRY. adj. [from mire.]
1. Deep in mud; muddy.

Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell,
and the under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled. Shaksp.

All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisive creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.

Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way.
Above her uncle rose the chucky clay. Gay.
So have I seen ill-coupled hounds Drag different ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Consisting of mire.

Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are flann'd like meadows, yet not dry,
Wah miry slime left on them by a flood? Shaksp.

MIS, an inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or depravation of the meaning: as, chance, luck;
mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning;
miscomputation, false reckoning; to like,
to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended; from mes in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples;
but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.

MISACCEPTATION. n. f. [mis and accep- tation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVENTURE. n. f. [mifadventure, Fr.
mis and adventure.] Mischance; misfortune;
ill luck; bad fortune.

Your looks are pale and wild, and do import Some misadventure. Shaksp.

When a commander, either upon necessity or mifadventure, falleth into danger, it much advances both his reputation and enterprise, if bravely he behaveth himself. Hayward.

The body consisted, after all the losses and mifadventures, of no less than six thousand foot. Clarendon.

Distinguish betwixt mifadventure and delight.
L'Estrange.

The trouble of a mifadventure now and then,
that reaches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution. Locke.

MISADVENTURED. adj. [from mifadventure.] Unfortunate.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose mifadventure'd piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife. Shaksp.

MISADVISED. adj. [mis and advised.] Ill
directed.

MISAIMED. adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.

The idle stroke enforcing furious ways,
Missing the mark of his misaimed flight,
Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen.

MISANTHROPE. } n. f. [mifanthrope, Fr.
mischanthropos.] A hater of mankind.

I am mifanthropos, and hate mankind. Shaksp.
Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a mifanthrope;
This into general odium drew him. Swift.

MISANTHROPY. n. f. [misanthropic, Fr.
from mifanthrope.] Hatred of mankind.

MISAPPLICATION. n. f. [mis and application.]
Application to a wrong purpose.

The indistinctness of many in the community of name, or the mifapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof. Brown.

The vigilance of those who preside over these clarities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the mifapplication of their bounty. Atterbury.

It is our duty to be provident for the future, and to guard against whatever may lead us into mifapplications of it. Rogers.

To MISAPPLY. v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.

Virtue itself turns vice, being mifapplied,
And vice sometimes by actions dignified. Shaksp.
The holy treasure was to be reserved, and issued for holy uses, and not mifapplied to any other ends. Hewel.

He that knows that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not mifapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.

To MISAPPREHEND. v. a. [mis and apprehend.]
Not to understand rightly.

That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my mifapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.

MISAPPREHENSION. n. f. [mis and apprehension.]
Mistake; not right apprehension.

It is a degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our mifapprehensions and errors. Glauville.

To MISASCRIBE. v. a. [mis and ascribe.]
To ascribe falsely.

That may be mifascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.

To MISASSIGN. v. a. [mis and assign.] To assign erroneously.

We have not mifassigned the cause of this phenomenon.
Boyle.

To MISBECOME. v. a. [mis and become.]

Not to become; to be unseemly; not to suit.

Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves need not misbecome
me. Sidney.

What to the daughter from England?
—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome. Shaksp.

The mighty sunder.
That boldness which lads get amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turned confidence, that those misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.

MISBEGET. } adj. [begot or begotten
MISBEGETTING.] with mis.] Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base.
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shaksp.
Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shaksp.

The misbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, defends with deadly throes
The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pulses into life. Dryden.

To MISBEHAVE. v. n. [mis and behave.]
To act ill or improperly.

MISBEHAVED. adj. [mis and behaved.]
Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.

Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou putt'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shaksp.

MISBEHAVIOUR. n. f. [mis and behaviour.]
Ill conduct; bad practice.

The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not so in others. Addison's Freeholder.

MISBELIEF. n. f. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.

MISBELIEVER. n. f. [mis and believer.]
One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.

Yes, if I drew it with a curs'd intent
To take a misbeliever to my bed,
It must be so. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

To MISCALL. v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.

My heart will sigh when I miscal it so. Shaksp.
The third act, which connects propositions and deduces conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscal it if we name it reason. Glauville's Sceptic.

What you miscal their folly is their care. Dryd.

To MISCALCULATE. v. a. [mis and calculate.]
To reckon wrong.

After all the care I have taken, there may be,
in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated. Arbuthnot.

MISCARRIAGE. n. f. [mis and carriage.]
1. Unhappy event of an undertaking;
failure; ill conduct.

Resolutions of reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former miscarriages.
King Charles.

When a counsellor, to save himself,
Would lay miscarriages upon his prince,
Exposing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as infamously base,
As should a common soldier seek behind,
And thrust his general in the front of war. Dryden.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had,
to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereby they made so ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the exult of fertility which contributed so much to their mifcarriages, was retraced and cut off.

Your cures aloud you tell,
But wisely your mifcarriages conceal. Gerth.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and mifcarriages of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be mifcarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child. Graunt.

To MISCARRY. v. n. [mis and carry.]

1. To fail; not to have the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the point intended.

Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier, who mifcarried at sea? Shakespeare.
Our sister's man is certainly mifcarried. Shakespeare.
Is it concluded he shall be protector?

—It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
But so it must be if the king mifcarry. Shakespeare.

If you mifcarry,
Your business of the world hath to an end,
And machination ceases. Shakespeare.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all mifcarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low. Shakespeare.
I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have mifcarried. Addison.

creants, which had forsaken the living God. Hooker.

2. A vile wretch.

Now by Apollo, King,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain,
—O villain! miscreant! Shakespeare.

If extraordinary leuty proves ineffectual, those miscreants ought to be made sensible that constitution is armed with force. Addison.

MISCREATE v. a. [mis and created.]

MISCREATED v. a. Formed unnaturally or illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
And Janner flew or Lagers miscreant. Fairy Queen.
Edisons he took that miscreant heir,
And that false other spirit, on whom he spread
A seeming body of the subtle air. Spenser.
God forbid, my lord,

That you should fashion, we Lorbrow your readings
With opening titles miscreant, whole right Suits not in native colours with the truth. Shakspeare.

MISDEED n. f. [mis and deed.] Evil action.
O God,

If thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakspeare.
Evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought.

Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd and exil'd
For lost misdeeds were punishments too mild. Dryden.

To MISDEEM v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.

All unwetted an enchanter had
His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
My loyalty, not such as it did seem. Fairy Queen.

Besides, were we unclinging able in will,
And of a wit that nothing could misdeem;
Equal to God, whose wisdom smooths all
And never errs, we might ourselves direct. Davies.

To MISDEMEAN v. a. [mis and demean.]

food.

deeply through his bedded flow.
Which by misdiet daily greater grew. Fairy Queen.

To MISDISTINGUISH v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.

If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish. Hooker.

To MISDO v. a. [mis and do.] To do wrong; to commit a crime.

Aford me place to show what I am prone Towards thee I intend for what I have misdone.
Milton.

To MISDO v. n. To commit faults.

Try the wrong first
Not willfully misdoing, but unaware. Milton.

Misdo. I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Lest to acknowledge, but more loth to part. Dryden.

MISDOER n. f. [from misdo.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.

Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicts sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing. Spenser.

MISDOING n. f. [from misdo.] Offence;
deviation from right.

The worth is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings. L'Estr.

To MISDOUBT v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.

If the only misdoer, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance. Sidney.

I do not misdo my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident. Shakspeare.

The bird that hath been lined in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoeth every bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was hind'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakspeare.

If you misdo me that I am not he,
I know not how I shall assure you farther. Shakspeare.

To believe his wiles my truth can move,
Is to misdo my reason or my love. Dryden.

MISDOUBT n. f. [mis and doubt.]

1. Suspicion of crime or danger.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoings present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to mix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shakspeare.

2. Irresolution; hesitation.

York, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoings to resolution. Shakspeare.

Dryden.

Some taking things upon trust, misemploy their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.

That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed on temporal objects, produces many sorrows. Addison.

They grew dissolute and profligate; and by mis-employing the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them.
Atterbury.

MISEMPLYMENT n. f. [mis and employment.] Improper application.

An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties. Hale.

MISER n. f. [miser, Lat.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.

Do not disdain to carry with you the worst words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the true tale of the sinner. Sidney.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous fore-token of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make, Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's lake. Spenser.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.

Decrepit miser! baleful wretch!

I am descended of a gentler blood. Shakspeare.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though he be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to miser's gold,
Rather than wrong Castulo I'd forget her. Otway.

No silver counts by dying miser's give'n;
Here had'd the rage of ill-requested Heav'n;
But such plain roots as pity could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE adj. [miserable, Fr. miser,

Latin.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.

O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?

Shakspeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakspeare.

MISERABLY adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.

Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrelled, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably galled to death. South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.

As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you, to the time love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained. Sidney.

3. Covetously.

Ainsworth.

MISERY n. f. [miseria, Lat. misere, Fr.]

1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery. Shakspeare.

Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure
we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain. Locke.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in misery. Law.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes,

We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Shakspeare.

The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life. Dryden.

3. [from miser.] Covetousness; avarice.

Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy, but a covetous man; yet misery now signifies not covetousness but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck n' th' world: he covetous
Than misery itself would give. Shakspeare.

In a fabric of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model;

for a little mifery may easily breed some misfortune of greater charge.

To MISFO'RM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.

His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore, And that misformed shape misshaped more. Spenser.

MISFO'RTUNE. n. f. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.

Fortune thus 'gan say, mifery and misfortune is all one.

And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift. Sid.

What world's delight, or joy of living speech, Can heart to plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,

And heaped with to huge misfortunes reach? Spenser.

Consider why the change was wrought, You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault. Adams.

To MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence.

It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.

As Henry's late presaging prophecy Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;

So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts What may befall him, to his harm or ours. Shakspeare.

This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne? My heart misgives me. Shakspeare.

Yet oft his heart divine of something ill misgives him. Milton.

This heart misgave him, that these were to many meet gloomy; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy. Addison.

MISGIVING. n. f. [from misgive.] Doubt; distrust.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his abomination, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issue of his future reward. South.

To MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.

Solyman charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own use. Knollys.

1. Ill administration of publick affairs.

Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon public misgovernment. Rokeigh.

2. Ill management.

Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unprovided of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskillfulness make them fall into vicious company. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.

There is not chastity enough in language Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady, I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Shakspeare.

MISGUIDANCE. n. f. [mis and guidance.] False direction.

The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter: which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the movable feasts. Haller on Time.

Whoever deceives a man, makes him run himself: and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction. Smith.

To MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debasifies it. Locke.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate, Nor tempt the gods to unequal war. Prior.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind, What the weak head with strongest bias rules Is pride, the never-failing vice of souls. Pope.

MISHA'P. n. f. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.

To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors. Sadley.

Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, till me, have there been any more such tempests wherein the hath thus wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser.

Sir knight, take to you wanted strength, And master these mishaps with patient might. Spenser.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here, Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shakspeare.

It cannot be But that success attends him: if mishap, Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or your revenge. Milton.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen, Speak; for he could not die unlike himself. Dennis.

To MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.

Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed. Macc.

By no means trust to your servants, who first lead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.

Bid her well beware, Left by some late appearing good surpris'd, She delate false, and misinform the will To do what God expressly hath forbid. Milton.

MISINFORMATION. n. f. [from misinform.] False intelligence; false accounts.

Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, who buckled with greatness, and set on by misinformation. South.

To MISINTERPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

The gentle reader will be happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocentest life traduced. Ben Jonson.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages unquoted and misinterpreted. Arbutnot.

To MISJOIN. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.

In reason's absence, mimic fancy wakes To imitate her; but misjoining shapes, Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams; Ill-matching words, and deeds long past, or late. Milton.

Lothar, more mistaking than I read, Misjoins the sacred body with a word. Dryden.

To MISJUDGE. v. a. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions; to judge ill.

You misjudge; You see through love, and that deludes your sight; As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water. Shakspeare.

By allowing misjudge that is innocent, he betrays offence to a weak and misgiving neighbour. Atter.

Too long misjudging have I thought that wife; But sure relentless folly steals thy breast. Pope.

To MISJUDGE. v. a. To mistake; to judge ill of.

This cold precipitates the vapours either in dew, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops. Darham.

In misling days, when I my thresher heard, With happy beer I to the barn repair'd. Gay.

To MISLEAD. v. a. mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way; to betray to mischief or mistake.

Take, oh take those lips away, That to sweetly were forsworn; And those eyes, the break of day, Lights that do mislead the morn. Shakspeare.

Your misled men: your states are yet worthy pity. If you would hear, and change your savage minds, Leave to be mad. Ben Jonson.

Thrust not servants who mislead or misinform you. Bacon.

O thieves! night, Why should'st thou but for some felonious end, In thy dark lantern thus close up the flares, That nature hang in heav'n, and still'd their lamps With everlasting oil, to give due light To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

What can they teach and not mislead? Ignorant of themselves, of God much more? Milt.

Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill, And recompense, as friends, the good misled; If mercy be a precept of thy will, Return that mercy on thy servant's head. Dryden.

The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception. Glaser.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it. Locke.

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill Appear in writing or in judging ill; But of the two let's dangerous is the offence To tire our patience, then mislead our sense. Pope.

MISLEADER. n. f. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt see as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my wits;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misdoers. Shaksp.
They have disordered and abandoned these heretical philosophers, teaching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they have been anciently plunged.

MISLEN. n. f. [corrupted from misfollane.]

They commonly sow those lands with wheat,
mislen, and barley. Montaigne.

TO MISLIKE. v. a. [mis and like.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.

It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings. Sidney.

Tertallian was not deceived in the place; but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse. Haleigh.

Judge not the preacher, for he may judge:

As thou mislike him, thou conceivest him not. Herbert.

MISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Disapprobatum; dislike.

Setting your fancies and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray should not become my wife. Shakspere.

Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,

How much his speech offends their noble ears. Fairf.

MISLIKER. n. f. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.

Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, but speakers with smiling countenances.

Ajcham.

TO MISLIVE. v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.

Should not think God, that gave him that good,

Eke cherish his child in his way the flood,

For it he mislive in lecheries and lust,

Little boots all the wealth and the trust. Spenser.

TO MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To to manage ill.

The debates of princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism. Locke.

MISMANAGEMENT. n. f. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.

It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ. Locke.

The falls of favorites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagement, taxation new,

All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

TO MISMARK. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.

Things are mismarked at contemplation and life for want of application of integrity. Collier.

TO MISMATCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unsuitably.

What at my years forsaken I had I Ugly, or old, mismatches to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me
To let me down contented. Southern.

TO MISNAME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.

They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confusing laws to others, and convey them as such to their followers, who are bold to misname all unambiguousness to their uncertainty, presumption. Boyle.

misordering the sentence, I would not have the matter frowned. Ajcham.

Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they are young. Ajch.

The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shakspere.

MISORDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.

When news was brought to Richard the Second,
that his uncles, who sought to reform the misorders of his counsellors, were persecuted in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Lance, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat disordered of his wits, what he would advise him to do. Shakspere.

He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misordered. Shakspere.

Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the misordering of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire. Shakspere.

MISORDERLY. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular; unlawful.

His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some misorderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar. Ajch.

sive misspent. [mis and spend.]

1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.

What a deal of cold business doth a man misspend the better part of life in? In scattering compliment, tendering visits, gathering and venting news. Ben Jonson.

Let him now endeavour to redeem what he hath misspent by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. Duty of Man.

First guilty conscience does the mirror bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long misspent, luxurious life. Dryden.

I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply misspent and vain. Blackm.

He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has misspent much has still a greater concern. Rogers.

Wise men retrieve as far as they are able, every misspent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

2. To waste; with a reciprocal pronoun.
Now let the arched knife their thirty limbs
Dissolve, for the mutual moisture due
To apples, berries, &c. misspends itself
In barren twigs. Phillips.

MISPENDER. n. f. [from misspend.] One who spends ill or prodigally.

I suspect the excellency of those mens parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time. Norris.

Some mispersuasions concerning the divine attributes tend to the corrupting mens manners.

Decay of Piety.

TO MISPLACE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.

I have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders, before I'll see the crown to toul misplaced. Shaksp.

What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When served but misplaced, or love mistaken.
Performs the work. Denham.

Is a man betray'd by such agents as he employs?
He misplaced his confidence, took hypocritry for fidelity, and to relied upon the services of a pack of villans. South.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we,
who could not very forcibly affect it! Atterbury.

TO MISPOINT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.

TO MISPRIS. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mef- prendre; sometimes undervalued or disdained, from the French verb mepriiser.

HAMMER. It is in both senses wholly obsolete.

1. To mistake.

You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lylander's blood. Shakspere.

2. To slight; to scorn; to despise.

He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. Shakspere.

Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the misprising of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire. Shakspere.

MISPRISION. n. f. [from misprise.]
1. Scorn; contempt. Not in use.

Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile misprison shackle up
My love, and her desert. Shakspere.

2. Mistake; misconception. Not in use.

Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy misprision most perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and herem is no cheat or misprision; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its rite. Clanville.

3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprision of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Misprision of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted. Council.

sequence, which is clear. Bramhall against Hobbes.

TO MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.]
To reckon wrong; to compute wrong.

Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned.

Swift.

TO MISRELA TE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsely.

To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it. Boyle.

MISRELATION. n. f. [from misrelate.]
False or inaccurate narrative.

Mine was only to prels home those things in writing, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein paralogisms are more quickly detected. Bramhall.

MIS

To MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory. If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure. Boyle.

To MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false. His doctrine was misreported, as though he had every where preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews. Hooke.

A man that never yet Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace. Shall. The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes us will often listen on the worst side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of these Locke. MISREPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation. We defend him not. Only desire to know his crime: 'tis possible. It may be some mistake or misreport. Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal. Dunk. As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bottom to his mortal enemy, so by detractation, and a slanderous misreport of persons, he is often brought to shut the same even to his best and truest friends. South's Sermons.

To MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage: mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief. Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed, are common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both. Swift. While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures. Swift.

MISREPRESENTATION. n. f. [from misrepresent.] 1. The act of misrepresenting. They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust. Swift. 2. Account maliciously false. Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publickly to own and retract them. Atterbury. MISRU'LE. n. f. [mis and rule.] Tumult; confusion; revel; unjust domination. 4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting. Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I miss'd him. Sidney. In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was miss'd. Sam. 5. To be without. We cannot miss him; he does make our fire, Fetch in our woods. Shakespeare's Tempest.

6. To omit. He that is so kind of himself, that he can never find in his heart to miss a meal, by way of punishment for his faults, shews he is not much fallen off from himself. Duty of Man. 7. To perceive want of. A well-to-do, a fight to gay. Prior. My second I'd love and care, May ever tend about thee to old age With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supply'd, That what by me thou hast lost thou lentst thine miss. Milton.

He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them. South. To Miss. v. n. 1. To fly wide; not to hit. Flying bullets now To execute his rage, appear too slow, They miss or sweep but common souls away. Walker. 2. Not to succeed. The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other. Bacon.

3. To fail; to mistake. 4. To be lost; to be wanting. My lord, Upon my lady's missing, came to me With his sword drawn. Shakespeare. Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought missing unto them. Samuel. For a time caught up to God, as once Moses was in the mount, and missing long, And the great Thane, who on fiery wheels Rode up to heav'n, yet once again to come. Milton.

5. To miscarry; to fail, as by accident. The invention not admitt'd, and each, how he To be the inventor miss'd, to say it seem'd, Once found, which yet unsound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Paradise Lost. 6. To fail to obtain, learn, or had; sometimes with of before the object. Gratus missing of the Moldavian led upon Maylat. Knolles.

The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury. Miss. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Loss; want. I could have better spar'd a better man. Oh, I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Shakespeare. If these papers have that evidence as thou, there will be no great miss of those which are lost, and may reader may be lashed without them. Locke.

2. Mistake; error. He did without any great miss in the hardest points of grammar. Johnson's Schoolmaster. 3. Hurt; harm. Obsolete. In humble dates is tooting fast. The trade is not to tickle, And though one fail through heedless haste, Yet is his miss not muckle. Spenser.

MISSAL. n. f. [missale, Lat. missal, Fr.] The mass book. By the rubrick of the missal, in every solemn mass, the priest is to go up to the middle of the altar. Building Act.

Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority. Her son tracing the desert wild, All his great work to come before him set, How to begin, how to accomplish best. His end of being on earth, and mission high. Milt. The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.

2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion. In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon.

3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use. In Char's army, however, the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission of discharge.

MIS

thought with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; when upon with one cry they ask'd mission. Bacon.

4. Faction; party. Not in use.

Utriusque deeds, in these fields of late,
These populous missions amongst the gods themselves,
 And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

MISSIONARY. } n. f. [missionnaire, Fr.]
 MISSIONER. } One sent to propagate religion.

You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.

Take mighty missioner you come,
 Ad partes infidelium. Dryden.

MISSIVE. adj. [missive, French.]

1. Such as is sent.
 The king grants a licence under the great seal, called a comité d'elme, to elect the prison he has nominated by his letters missive. Ayliffe.

1. A letter sent: it is retained in Scotland in that sense.

Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly voluntary from many parts. Bacon.

2. A messenger. Both obsolete.
 Rousing in Alexandria, you
 Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
 Did poke my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.
 While wrapt in the wonder of it came missives from the king, whil' all hail'd me thine of Cawder. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To MISPEAK. v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong.

A mother delights to hear
 Her early child mispeak half-utter'd words. Danne.

To MISPEAK. v. n. To blunder in speaking.

It is not to: thou hast mispeaked, misheard;
 Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakespeare.

MIST. n. f. [myrte, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
 To us discovers day from far;
 His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
 Which our dark nation long involv'd. Dennham.
 And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
 And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; to a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and round globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Gray.

But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
 And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.
 My people's eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are walk'd into the most desperate actions. King Charles.

His passion cast a mist before his face,
 And either made or magnify'd the out. Dryd.

To MIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking-glass;
 If that her breath will mist or stain the glass,
 Why then the lyes. Shakespeare.

MISTAKEN. pret. and part. pass. of mistake, mis taken, and so retained in Scotland.

MIS

This dagger hath mistaken, for so! the sheath lies empty on the back of Montague,
 The point misheathed in my daughter's bosom. Shakespeare.

MISTAKEABLE. adj. [from mistake.] liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakeable numbers. Brown.

To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.

These did approach a great affinity between their invocation of sa us and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other. Stillington.

This will make the reader very much mistake, and misanderstand his meaning. Locke.
 Fanny passes for knowledge, and what is pretty said is mistaken for solid. Locke.
 Fools into the notion fall.

That vice or virtue there is none at all;
 Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain.
 To mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.

To MISTAKE. v. n. To err; not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Raleigh.
 Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.

Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding among friends. Swift.

To be MISTAKEN. To err. [To mistake has a kind of reciprocal sense; I mistake, je me trompe. I am mistaken, means, I misconceive, I am in an error; more frequently than I am all underfoot; but, my opinion is mistaken, means my opinion is not rightly understood.]

The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.

England is so idly king'd:
 — You are too much mistaken in this king:
 Question, you grace, the late emissadors;
 How modest in exception, and withal
 How terrible in constant resolution. Shakespeare.
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
 But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.

MISTAKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.

He never shall find out fit mates; but such
 As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.
 Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.

Those terrours are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley.

MISTAKINGLY. adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.

 The extravagances of the least life are the more consummate disorders of a mistaken or neglected youth. L'Estrange.

To MISTEAL. v. a. [mis and steal.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.

To MISTEMPER. v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to disorder.

MIS

This inundation of *mis*temper'd humour
 Refus'd you only to be qualified. Shakespeare.

MISTEER. adj. [from miskier, trade, Fr.]

What miskier, what kind of. Obsolete.
 The redcross knight toward him crossed fast,
 To weet what miskier might was so diffus'd,
 There him he finds all senseless and aghast. Spens.

To MISTEER. v. a. [mis and term.] To term erroneously.

Hence banished, is banished from the world;
 And world exil'd is death. That banished
 Is death misterr'd. Shakespeare.

To MISTHINK. v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill; to think wrong.

How will the country, for these woful chances,
 Misthink the kind, and not be satisfy'd.
 We, the greatest, are misthought
 For thoughts that others do. Shakespeare.
 Thoughts! which how sound they harbour in thy breast,

Adam, misthought of her to thee so dear! Milton.
 To MISTIME. v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.

MISTINESS. n. f. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glasses, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detrain or imbibes the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon.

MISTION. n. f. [from mistus, Lat.] The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living firm as well as that of mystion, and though they wholly seem to return into the body, depart upon distillation. Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mystion, produce colour. Boyle.

MISTLETOE. n. f. [myrte, Saxon; mistel, Danish, birdlime; and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a baton, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, enclosing a plant heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees, from whence the ancients accounted it a superplant, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree, for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of it, strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Miller.

If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that rare
 Crave mistle and ivy for them for to spare. Tusser.

A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
 The trees, though summer, yet lorn and lean,
 O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe. Shaksp.
Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazels, and rarely upon oaks: the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green winter and summer, and beareth a white glittering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples strow
 With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay.

MIS'LINN. adj. [mis and like.] Resembling a mist.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.

—Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans Mistlike entold me from the search of eyes. Shak.

MISTO'D. The part. pass. of mislead.

MISTO'OK. The part. pass. of mislook.

What sudden blaze of majesty,

Too divine to be mistook.

MIS'TRESS. n. f. [maitresse, maitresse, Fr.]

1. A woman who governs: correlative to subject or to servant.

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon

To stand his auspicious mistress. Shak.

Let us prepare

Some welcome for the mistress of the house. Shak.

Like the lily,

That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,

I'll hang my head and perish. Shak.

He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,

Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe. Shak.

I will not charm my tongue; I'm bound to Speak.

My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed. Shak.

The late queen's gentlewoman! a knight's daughter!

To be her mistress! the queen's queen!

Shak.

Rome now is mistress of the whole world, sea and land, to either pole. Ben Jonson.

Wouldst not, sovereign mistress! if perhaps

Thou canst, who art sole wonder; much lets arm

Thy look, the heav'n of maidens, with disdain. Milton.

Those who assert the lunar orb presides

O'er humid bodies, and the ocean guides

Whole waves obsequious ebb, or swelling run

With the declivity of ever-ascending moon;

With reason from her empire to maintain

As a mistress of the rivers and the main. Blackmore.

What a noble spectacle, for a nation that had been mistress at sea to long! Ascham.

2. A woman who has something in possession.

There had she enjoyed herself while she was mistress of herself, and had no other thoughts but such as might issue out of quiet senses. Sadley.

Age is to come, that shall your bounty hear;

Will thank you mistress of the Indies were;

Though freighter bound to your fortune did confine,

In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Wall.

tended he should forthwith marry. Clarendon.

Nice hon our still engages to requite

False mistress and proud with flight to flight. Gran.

6. A term of contemptuous address.

Look you pale, mistress,

Do you perceive the ghastliness of her eye? Shak.

7. A whore; a concubine.

MISTRU'ST. n. f. [mis and trust.] Disfidence; suspicion; want of confidence.

He needs not our mistrust, since he delivers

Our offences, and what we have to do,

To the direction just. Shak.

Not then mistrust, but tender love, ignis

That I should mind thee off, and mind thou me!

Milton.

To MISTRU'ST. v. a. [mis and trust.] To suspect; to doubt; to regard with disfidence.

Will any man allege those human infirmities, as reasons why these things should be mistrusted or doubted. Hooker.

By a divine instinct, mens minds mistrust

Enslaving danger; as by proof we see,

The waters swell before a bottomous storm. Shak.

Fate her own book mistrusted at the fight,
On that side war, on this a single fight. Cowley.

The relation of a Spartan youth, that suffered a fox concealed under his robe to tear out his bowels, is mistrusted by men of business. Brown.

The generous train complies,
Nor fraud mistrusts in virtue's fair disguise. Pope.

MISTRU'STRUL. adj. [mistrust and full.]
Diffident; doubting.

I hold it cowardice

To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart

Hath power'd an open hand in sign of love. Shak.

Here the mistrustful fowl no harm suspects,

So false are all things which our king protects. Waller.

MISTRU'STRULY. adv. [from mistrust- ful.] With suspicion; with mistrust.

MISTRU'STRULNESS. n. f. [from mistrust- ful.] Diffidence; doubt.

Withal him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I met him. Sadley.

MISTRU'STRULSS. adj. [from mistrust.]
Confident; un-suspecting.

Where he doth in stream mistrustless play,

Weld with night's robe, they stalk the shore abroad. Carew.

MISTY. adj. [from mist.]

1. Clouded; overpread with mists.

The no-
-row far with purple beams

Dispers'd the shadows of the misty night. F. Queen.

I and howling wolves among the jades

That drag the trudge melancholy night;

Who with their drowy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves; and from their misty jaws

Breath foul contagious darkness in the air. Shak.

Parents overprize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection, which after the long carriage, as things seem bigger in morning. Wotton.

Now simoals with show's the misty mountain ground,

And floated fields he undistinguish'd round. Pope.

2. Obscure; dark; not plain.

To MISUNDERSTAND. v. a. [mis and un- derstand.] To misconceive; to mistake.

The words of Tertullian, as they are by them alleged, are un-derstood. Hooker.

He failed in distinguishing two regions, both called Eden, and also, the myriads of two of the four rivers. Raleigh.

In vain do men take sanctuary in such misunderstandings as these; and from a false per-sua-

sion that they cannot reform their lives, never go about it. South.

Thus, if it be neglected, will make the reader

very much mistake and misunderstand his meaning.

Were they only design'd to instruct the three succeeding generations, they are in no danger of being misunderstood. Adams.

The example of a good man is the best direction

we can follow in the performance of our duty; the most exact rules and precepts are subject to be misunderstood; some at least will mistake their meaning. Rogers's Sermons.

MISUNDERSTANDING. n. f. [from mis- understand.]

1. Disattention; difference; disagreement.

There is a great misunderstanding betwixt the corpulcular philosophers and the chemists. Boyle.

As a false favourite doth his prince's name in deeds dishonourable. Shak.

It hath been their custom shamefully to misuse the fervent zeal of men to religious arms, by converting the monies that have been levied for such wars to their own services. Religion.

Bacchus, that first from out the purple
Cruel'd the sweet poison of misused wine. Religion.

Machiavel makes it appear, that the weakness of Italy, once so strong, was caused by the corrupt practices of the papacy, in depraving and misusing religion. South.

MISUSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Evil or cruel treatment.

Upon whole dead corpse there was such misuse,

Such beauty, shameless transformation,

By those well-women done, as may not be Without much flame retold. Shakespeare.

2. Wrong or erroneous use.

How names taken for things mislead the understanding, the attentive reading of philosophical writers would discover, and that in words little suspected of any such misuse. Locke.

3. Misapplication; abuse.

We have reason to humble ourselves before God by fasting and prayer, lest he should punish the misuse of our mercies, by stopping the course of them. Atterbury.

To MISUSEN. v. n. [mis and ween.] To misjudge; to distrust. Obsolete.

Later times things more unknown shall show,

Why then should wits man to much misween. Spem.

To MISWEND. v. n. [mis and pend, Dan.

Saxon.] To go wrong. Obsolete.

Every thing began with reason,

Will come by ready means unto his end;

But things unconfessed must needs misween. Hubbard's Tale.

For heavy'd deceived to conceal the flame,

To make the infernal mine to feel his flame. Fairf.

MISY. n. f. A kind of mineral.

Misy contains no vitrol but that of iron: it is a very beautiful mineral, of a fine bright yellow colour, of fragile fracture, and resembles the golden minerals. Hill.

MITE. n. f. [mite, Fr. mijt, Dutch.]

1. A small insect found in cheese or corn;

a weevil.

Venermy breeds mites like a cheese, consumes itself to the very pining, and dies with feeding its own stomach. Shakespeare.

The polished glass, whose small convex

Enlarges to ten millions of degrees,

The visible elixir of nature's hand

Least animal. Philips.

The idea of two is as distinct from the idea of three, as the magnitude of the earth from that of a mite. Locke.

2. The twentieth part of a grain.

The Seville piece of eight contains thirteen pennyweight twenty-one grains and fiftieth part, of which there are twenty in the grain, of sterling silver, and is in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny. Ascham.

3. Any thing proverbially small; the third part of a farthing.

Though any man's earn they do hate,

They will not allow him a mite. Tusser.

Are you defrauded, when he feeds the poor,

Our mite decreases nothing of your store. Dryden.

Did I see my own with-hold

From the impotent and old? Saif.

4. A small particle.

Put blue-bottles into an ant-hill, they will be flamed with red, because the ants thrust in their snags, and mist into them a small mite of their stinging liquor, which hath the same effect as oil of vitrol. Ray on Creation.

MITHRA. n. f. A plant. Miller.

MITHRIDATE. n. f. [mithridate, Fr.]

Mithridate is one of the capital medicines of the East, consisting of a great number of ingredients, and has its name from its inventor Mithridates, king of Pontus. Quincy.

A mixed multitude went up with them, and flocks and herds. Exodus.

He sent out of his mouth a blast of fire, and out of his lips a flaming breath, and out of his tongue, he cast out sparks and tempests; and they were all mix together. 2 Esdras.

Air, and ye elements, the eldest birth Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix And nourish all things. Milton.

3. To form of different substances or kinds.

I have chosen an argument, mix of religious and civil considerations, and likewise mix between contemplative and active, Bacon's Holy War.

4. To join; to mingle; to confuse.

Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear; This is the English not the Turkish court. Shaksp. She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent; What choice to choose for delicacy best, What order, so contriv'd as not to mix Tastes, not well join'd, elegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindred change. Milton.

TO MIX. v. n. To be united into one mass, not by junction of surfaces, but by mutual intromission of parts.

But is there yet no other way, besides These painful passages, how we may come To death, and mix with one consubstantial dust? Milton.

If spirits embrace, Total they mix, men of pure with pure Desiring; or restrain'd conveyance need As flesh to mix with flesh, or soul with soul. Milton. MIXEN. n. f. [mixen, Sax.] A dunghill; a laystall.

MIXTION. n. f. [mixtion, Fr. from mix.] Mixture; confusion of one thing with another.

Others perceiving this rule to fall short, have pierced it out by the mixture of vanity among bodies, believing it is that which makes one rarer than another. Digby on Housen.

They are not to be lightly put over as elementary or tuberculous mixtures. Iron.

MIXTLY. adv. [from mix.] With coalition of different parts into one.

MIXTURE. n. f. [mixtura, Latin.]

1. The act of mixing; the state of being mixed.

O happy mixture, wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presumptuous, as well as we are kept under with the temerity of our own wretchedness, nor, while we train in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us! Hooker.

Those liquors are expelled out of the body which, by their mixture, convert the aliment into an animal liquid. Arbutnot.

1. by baleful furies led, With monstrous mixture stain'd my mother's bed. Pope.

2. A mass formed by mingled ingredients. Come vial—What if this mixture do not work at all? Shakspere.

While we live in this world, where good and bad men are blended together, and where there is also a mixture of good and evil wisely distributed by God, to serve the ends of his providence. Atterb.

3. That which is added and mixed. Neither can God himself be otherwise understood, than as a round face and disengaged from all corporeal mixtures, perceiving and moving all things. Stillinger.

Cleero doubts whether it were possible for a community to exist, that had not a prevailing mixture of piety in its constitution. Addison's Freeholder.

MIXMAZE. n. f. [A cant word, formed from maze by reduplication.] A maze; a labyrinth.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books, and the clue to lead them through the mizmaze of variety of opinions and authors to truth. Locke.

MIZZEN. n. f. [mezaen, Dutch.]

The mizzen is a mast in the stern or back part of a ship: in some large ships there are two such masts, that standing next the main mast is called the main mizzen, and the other near the poop the bonaventure mizzen; the length of a mizzen mast is half that of the main mast, or the same with that of the main top mast from the quarterdeck, and the length of the mizzen topmast is half that. Bailey.

A commander at sea had his leg fractured by the fall of his mizzen topmast. Wijeman.

MOAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Lamentation; audible sorrow; grief expressed in words or cries. I have disabled mine estate, By shewing something a more twelvling port, Than my faint means would grant continuance; Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd from such a noble rate. Shakspere.

The treble stream ran by her, and murmur'd her moans; The salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones. Shakspere.

Sullen moans, Hollow groans, And cries of tortur'd ghosts. Pope's St. Cecilia.

MOAT. n. f. [moite, Fr. a mound; mota, low Lat.] A canal of water round a house or castle for defence.

The castle I found of good strength, having a great moat round about it, the work of a noble gentleman, of whose unthrifty son he had bought it. Sidney.

The fortress thrice himself in person storm'd; Your valour bravely did the assault sustain, And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

No walls were yet, nor fence, nor moats, nor mound, Nor drum was heard. Dryden's Ovid.

TO MOAT. v. a. [mutter, Fr. from the noun.] To surround with canals by way of defence.

I will presently to St. Luke's; there at the moated Grange resides this dejected Maniac. Shaksp.

An arm of Lather, with a gentle flow, The palace moats, and o'er the pebbles creeps, And with soft murmurs calms the coming sleep. Dryden.

He sees he can hardly approach greatness, but, as a moated castle, he must first pass the mud and slush with which it is encompassed. Dryden.

MOB. n. f. [contracted from mobile, Lat.] The crowd; a tumultuous rout. Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawner; a very monster in a Bartholomew-fair, for the mob to gaze at. Dryden.
Dreams are but interludes, which fancy wakes; When monarch reason sleeps, this mimic wakes; Compound a medley of disjointed things, A court of cobbles, and a mob of kings. Dryden.
A cluster of mob were making themselves merry with their betters. Addison's Freetholder.

MOB. n. f. [from mobile.] A kind of female undress for the head.
TO MOB. v. a. [from the noun.] To harass, or overbear by tumult.
MO'BASH. adj. [from mob.] Mean; done after the manner of the mob.
MO'BAY. n. f. An American drink made of potatoes.
MO'BILE. n. f. [mobile, Fr.] The populace; the rout; the mob.

5. Fashion; custom.

There are certain garbs and moder of speaking, which vary with the times, the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Dezobry.
We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid ornaments of moder and magnification. L'Estrange.
They were invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was the humour and moder of the age. Temple.
As we know count the different faces of persons, we see too their different habits and dresses, according to the moder that prevailed. Addison.
Thou' wrong the moder, comply; more sense is shown in wearing others' follies than your own. Young.

MOD

If faith itself has different dresses worn,
What wonder moderis in wit should take their turn?
Pope.

MODEL. n. f. [modele, Fr. modulus, Lat.]
1. A representation in little of something made or done.

I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
Lend each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength.

You have the models of several ancient temples,
though the temples and the gods are perished.
Shakespeare.
Addison.

2. A copy to be imitated.
A fruit it would be if some king should build his maison-haute by the model of Solomon's palace.
Hooker.

They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform the models what they call religious.
King Charles.

3. A mould; any thing which shows or gives the shape of that which it encloses.

Nothing can we call our own but death;
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
Shakespeare.

4. Standard; that by which any thing is measured.

As he who presumes steps upon the throne of God, to be that despairs measures Providence by his own little contracted model.
South.

5. In Shakespeare it seems to have two unexampled senses. Something representative.

I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter.
Shakespeare.

6. Something small and diminutive; for module, a small measure: which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.

England's model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart.
Shakespeare.

TO MOD'EL. v. a. [modeller, Fr.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.

When they come to model heav'n,
And calculate the stars, how they will wield
The mighty frame.
Milton.

The government is modelled after the same manner with that of the cautious, as much as to finish a community can imitate those of so large an extent.
Addison on Italy.

MOD'ELLER. n. f. [from model.] Planner;
schemer; contriver.

Our great modellers of gardens have their magazines of plants to dispose of.

Romans will not venture to affirm.
Smollett.

5. Placed between extremes; holding the mean.

Quietly consider the trial that hath been thus long had of both kinds of reformation; as well this moderate kind, which the church of England hath taken, as that other more extreme and rigorous, which certain churches elsewhere have better liked.
Hooker.

MOD

6. Of the middle rate.
More moderate gifts might have prolong'd his date,
Two early fitted for a better state.

Moderateness is commonly used of things, and moderation of persons.

MODERATION. n. f. [moderatio, Latin.]

1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.

Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation?
Hooker.

A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly tempered with candour and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation.
Atterb.

In moderation placing all my glory,
While tories call me whig, and whigs a tory.
Pope.

MODERATOR. n. f. [moderator, Latin;
modérateur, French.]

1. The person or thing that calms or restrains.

Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of frequent thoughts, a moderator of passions, and a procure of contentedness.
Walton.

2. One who presides in a disputation, to restrain the contending parties from indecency, and confine them to the question.

Sometimes the moderator is more troublesome than the actor.
Bacon's Essay.

How does Philopolis seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long-practised
moderator?
More.

The first person who speaks when the court is set,
opens the case to the judge, chairman, or moderator of the assembly, and gives his own reasons for his opinion.
Watts.

MODERN. n. f. [moderne, Fr. from moderus, low Latin; supposed a casual corruption of hodiernus. Vel potius ab adverbio modis, modernus, at à die diurnus. Anstworth.]

1. Late; recent; not ancient; not antique.
Some of the ancient, and likewise divers of the modern writers, that have laboured in natural magick, have noted a sympathy between the sun and certain herbs.
Bacon.

The glorious parallels then downward bring
To moderna wonders, and to Britain's king.
Prior.

2. In Shakespeare, vulgar; mean; common.
Trailes, such as we present modern friends withal.
Shakespeare.

MOD

The justice
With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern influences.
Shakespeare.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless.
Shakespeare.

MOD'ERNS. n. f. Those who have lived lately, opposed to the ancients.

There are moderns who, with a slight variation, adopt the opinion of Plato.
Boyle on Colours.

Some by old words to same have made pretence;
Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their sense!
Pope.

TO MOD'ERNISE. v. a. [from modern.] To adapt ancient compositions to modern persons or things; to change ancient to modern language.

MOD'ERNISM. n. f. [from modern.] Deviation from the ancient and classical manner. A word invented by Swift.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms.
Swift.

Novelty.

MOD'EST. adj. [modestus, Fr. modestus, Lat.]

1. Not arrogant; not presumptuous; not boastful; bashful.

Of boasting more than of a tomb afraid;
A soldier should be modest as a maid.
Young.

2. Not impudent; not forward.

Resolve me with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserve, or they impose this usage.
Shakespeare.

Her face, as in a nymph, display'd
A fair fierce boy, or in a boy betray'd
The blushing beauties of a modest maid.
Dryden.

3. Not loose; not unchaste.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife;
the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.
Shakespeare.

4. Not excessive; not extreme; moderate within a mean.

There appears much joy in him, even so much that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.
Shakespeare.

During the last four years, by a modest computation, there have been brought into Great Britain six millions sterling in bullion.
Addison.

MOD'ESTLY. adv. [from modest.]

1. Not arrogantly; not presumptuously.

I may modestly conclude, that whatever errors there may be in this play, there are not those which have been objected to it.
Dryden.

First he modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tr'd with lectures;
Which help'd to mortify his pride,
Yet gave him to the heart to chide.
Swift.

Thou learn'd, well bred; and thou well bred,
sincere,
Modestly bold, and humanly severe.
Pope.

2. Not impudently; not forwardly; with respect.

I, your glass,
Will modestly shew over to yourself
That of yourself, which yet you know not of.
Shakespeare.

3. Not loosely; not lewdly; with decency.

4. Not excessively; with moderation.

MOD'ESTY. n. f. [modestia, Fr. modestas,
Latin.]

1. Not arrogance; not presumptuousness.

They cannot, with modesty, think to have found out absolutely the best which the wit of men may devise.
Hooker.

2. Not impudence; not forwardness; as, his petition was urged with modesty.

3. Moderation; decency.

A lord will hear you play;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over-eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion.

4. Chastity; purity of manners.

Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By those exterior shew? Put the is more,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakespeare.

Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care; for his numerous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.

Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Clayton.

MODISTY-PIECE, n. f.

A narrow life which runs along the upper part of the flaps before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Adams.

MODICUM, n. f. [Latin.] Small portion; pittance.

What modicum of wit he utters: his evasions have cars thus long. Shakespeare.

Though hard their fate,
A curse of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudge'd that modum. Dryden.

MODIFIABLE, adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a ditinct, visible image in the uniform, unvariable eternity of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either till escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODIFIABLE, adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

MODIFICATION, n. f. [modification, Fr.]
The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs human voice, and the feveral modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth. Holter.

The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impelled, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Beattie.

TO MODIFY, v. a. [modifier, French.]

1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of apt-ness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the valuable motions of the organs, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fall upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton.

2. To soften; to moderate.

Of his grace

He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

TO MODIFY, v. n. To extenuate.
After all this discounting and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. LeStrange.

MODILLON, n. f. [Fr. modiolus, Lat.]

Modillions, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the cornithian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the hammer or drip: this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar, for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillions, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.

The modillions or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator.

MODISH, adj. [from mode.] Fashionable;
formed according to the reigning custom,

Not you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more vitious than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Spekator.

MODISHLY, adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.

Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs
modishly. Locke.

MODISHNESS, n. f. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.

TO MODULATE, v. a. [modulator, Lat.] To form found to a certain key, or to certain notes.

The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, weastans, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate
the found. Grew's Colours.

Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive so many. Brown.

Febra propagates around
Each charm of modulated sound. Anon.

MODULATION, n. f. [from modulate; modulation, French.]

1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixed: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been repited all different kinds. Woodward.

The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the tune, but as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognition with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the visible powers and human souls clothed in flesh. Gower's of the Tongue.

2. Sound modulated; harmony; melody.

Immunious songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thompson.

MODULATOR, n. f. [from modulate.] He who forms founds to a certain key; a tuner; that which modulates.

The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of nutrition. Derham.

MODULE, n. f. [modulus, Lat.] An empty representation; a model; an external form.

My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then, all this thou see'st, is but a cloud
And module of confounded royalty. Shakespeare.

MODUS, n. f. [Latin.] Something paid as a compensation for titles on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.

One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the title of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth

His free-will, to her own inclining left

In even scale.

He is a capable judge; can hear both sides with an indifferent ear: is determined only by the moments of truth, and to retract his past errors.

3. An indivisible particle of time.

If I would go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be kind led.

The night's purpose never was o'erlook,

Unless the deed go with it: from this moment

The very firings of my heart shall be

The firings of my hand.

The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment.

While I a moment name, a moment's pa;

I'm nearer death in this verse than the last.

A fool at forty is a fool indeed.

Yet thus receiving and returning bliss

In the great moment, in this golden now,

When every trace of what, or when, or how,

Should from my soul by raging love be torn.

MOMENTALLY, adv. [from momentum,

Lat.] Lasting but a moment.

Art but momentally remaining in our ladies, hath no proportionable space for its conversion, only of length enough to reiterate the heart.

MOMENTANEOUS, adj. [from momentum,

Lat.] Lasting but a moment.

Small dissimulations, when exceeding great good is due to censure; and, on the other side, momentary benequity, when a hurt which they draw after them is unpardonable, are not at all to be respected.

Flame above is durable and confident; but with us it is a transitory and momentary.

Source could the shady king

The horrid turn of his intentions tell,

But the swift as the momentary wing

Of lightning, or the words he spake, left hell.

MOMENTARY, adj. [from moment,] Lasting for a moment; done in a moment.

Momentary as a fond,

Swift as a shadow, shoot as any dream.

Swift as thought the flying shade

Through air his momentary journey made.

Onions, garlic, pepper, salt and vinegar, taken in great quantities, excite a momentary heat and boil.

MOMENTOUS, adj. [from momentum, Lat.]

Important; weighty; of consequence.

Great Anne, weighing the events of war

Monarch, in her prudent heart these chose.

If any false step be made in the more accurate concerns of life, the whole scheme of ambitious designs is broken.

It would be a very weak thing to give up to mo- mentous a point as this, only because it has been contested.

MOMMERY, n. f. [or maunery, from mun-

mer, mommie, Fr.] An entertainment in which makers play frolics. See MOMF.

All was jollity,

Feasting and mirth, light wantonness and laughter,

Typing and playing, merrily and merrily,

Till life fled from us like an idle dream,

A show of momery without a meaning.

MONACHAL, adj. [monachal, Fr. monachalis,

Lat. monachicus.] Monastic; relating to monks, or conventual orders.

MONACHISM, n. f. [monachisme, Fr.] The state of monks; the monastick life.

MONAD, n. f. [μονάς.] An indivisible

MONADIC, thing.

of itself is nothing but an infinite congeries of physical monads.

MONARCH, n. f. [monarch, Fr. monarque.]

1. A governor invested with absolute authority; a king.

I was

A model for a monarch.

Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself.

The father of a family or nation, that uses his servants like children, and advises with them in what concerns the commonweal, and thereby is willingly obeyed by them, is what the schools mean by a monarch.

2. One superior to the rest of the same kind.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,

Three centuries he grows, and three he stays

Supreme in fate, and in three more decays.

With the distinguishing is the regal race,

One monarch wears an open, haughty face;

Shed to his fate, and godlike to behold,

His royal body shines with specks of gold.

Return'd with dire, remorseless sway,

The monarch savage rends the trembling prey.

3. Prebend.

Come, then a monarch of the vine,

Plump, fat, and full, with pink eyes,

In thy vatous cases be drunk.

MONARCHAL, adj. [from monarch.] Souting a monarch; regal; princely; imperial.

Satan, when most transcendent glory rais'd

Above his fellows, with unassail'd pride,

Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus spoke.

MONARCHICAL, adj. [monarchique, Fr.

monarchique; from monarch.] Vested in a single ruler.

That looks will only live in free states, is a pretty conceit to advance the opinion of popular policies, and from such others in nature to disparage monar- chical government.

The decretals resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome.

TO MONARCHISE, v. n. [from monarch.]

To play the king.

Allowing him a faculty, a little scene

To monarchize, he found, and kill with looks.

MONARCHY, n. f. [monarchie, Fr. monarchie.]

1. The government of a single person.

While the monarchy flourish'd, the world wanted not a protector.

2. Kingdom; empire.

I pass

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The fact that the world is not my danger's goal,

Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,

Who could aloud, what I could for perjury

Can this dark monarchy of false Christs? She

This small instance

Contenteth me, and 's worth a monarchy.

MONASTERY, n. f. [monastere, Fr. monaste-

rium, Lat.] House of religious retirement; convent; abbey; cloister. It is usually pronounced, and often written monestry.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown;

There, virgins honorable vows receiv'd,

But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd.

In a monastery your devotions cannot carry you so far toward the next world, as to make this life

the fight of you.

MONASTICAL, adj. [monastique, Fr. mo-

nastricus, Lat.] Religiously recluse; pertaining to a monk.

I drave my sister to live in the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook merely monastick.

The filices and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars derive the institution of their monastick life from the example of Joan and Elias.

When young, you led a life monastick

And were a well-remember'd

Now in your age you grow fantastick.

MONASTICALLY, adv. [from monastick.]

Reclusely; in the manner of a monk.

I have a dozen years more to outlive for, and mo- nastically pallid in this country of liberty and delight.

MONDAY, n. f. [from moon and day.] The second day of the week.

MONET, n. f. [moneta, Fr. moneta, Lat.

It has properly no plural except when money is taken for a single piece; but monies was formerly used for fums.] Met-tal coined for the purposes of commerce.

Importune him for monies; be not ceast

With flighty denial.

The jealous wittily knave hath masses of money.

You need my help, and you say,

Shylock, we would have money.

I will give thee the worth of it in money.

Wives the readiest helps

To betray heady husbands, rob the only

And lend the money on return or lust.

Money differs from monies in that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is determined by the stamp it bears, which is a public contract.

My discourse to the hen-peck'd has produced

many consequences, such a discourse is dangerous etc., and every married man's money.

Shall I withhold a little money or food from my few creature, for fear he should not be good enough to receive it from me?

People are not obliged to receive any monies, except of their own coinage by a public act. Those who offerers or money holders will be found in need of it, if this money is made out of the exchequer.

MONETARY, n. f. [money and bag.] A large purse.

Look to my house; I am right both to go,

There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,

For I did dream of monies to-night.

My place was taken up by a little puppy, with a money bag under each arm.

MONETARY, n. f. [money and box.] A till;

repository of ready coin.

MONETARY, n. f. [money and change.]

A broker in money.

The monies or money changers being a scandalous employment at Rome, is a reason for the high rate of interest.

MONETARY, adj. [from monies.] Rich in money; often used in opposition to those who are possessed of lands.

Invite monied men to lend to the merchants, for the continuing and quickening of trade.

If exportation will not balance importation, away must your silver go again, while the monied or not monied; for whose goods do not, silver must pay for the commodities you spend.

Several turned their money into these funds, merchants as well as other monied men.

With these monies tell me, monied men, such as had raised vast sums by trading with stocks and funds, and lending upon great interest.

MONETARY, n. f. [monneyer-que, Fr. from

money.]

1. One that deals in money; a banker.

2. A corner of money.

MONETARY, adj. [from money.] Wanting money; penniless.

The strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss of bad rents received out of lands in monetary times.

MONETARY, n. f. [money and matter.]

Account of debtor and creditor.

What if you and I Nick should enquire how money matters stand between us?

MONETARY, n. f. [money and fin- ancier.] One who raises money for others.

Suppose a young inexperienced man in the hands of monetary men, such fellows are like your wire-drawing mill, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull on his whole body at last.

MONETARY, n. f. A plant.

MONETARY, n. f. [money and worth.]

Something valuable; something that will bring money.

There is either money or monetary in all the concerns of life; for we live in a mercenary world, and this is the price of all things in it.

MONETARY, n. f. [monny, Sax. and corn.]

Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye; mis-cellane, or masha.

MONGER. n. f. [mangere, Sax, a trader; from mangian, Sax, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing: as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.

Do you know me?—Yes, excellent well, you are a fish-monger. Shakspeare

The impatient states-monger
Could now content himself no longer. Hudibras

MONGRAL. adj. [us mongcorn, from man, Sax. or mugen, to mix, Dutch.] Of a mixed breed: commonly written mangrel for mangrel.

This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras
Ye mongrel work of heav'n, with human shape,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden
I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden

Bull, groveling, worthless wretches,
Mongrel in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors, Lad! Johnson

His friendships still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind;
No fools of monk, or mongrel breed,
Who turn would pass for lords indeed. Swift
MONIMESTER. n. f. [from moner, Lat.] It seems here to signify inscription.
Some others were driven and silent
Into great mists and to wedges square,
Some in round plates withouten monument. Spenser

TO MONISH. v. a. [monico, Lat.] To admonish, of which it is a contraction.
Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to succed, and glad to go forward in love. African

MONISHMENT. n. f. [from monish.] An admonisher; a monitor.

MONITION. n. f. [monitio, Lat. monition, French.]

1. Information; hint.
We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Hobbes on Time

2. Instruction; document.
Unruly ambition is dead, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange

Then after sage monitions from his friends,
His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politics his dangerous wit. Sayt

MONITOR. n. f. [Lat.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent; be but his scholar, and you are safe. Pacca

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untam'd, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conference as might be its own chasten.
South

We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Perius himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden

The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitions to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke

MONITORIAL. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.

Loles, interchanges, and disappointments, are monitorial, and instructive. L'Estrange

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitorial shot in my essay with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope

MONITORIAL. n. f. Admonition; warning.

A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon

MONK. n. f. [monac, Sax. monachus, Lat. monachus.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain obligations.

'T would prove the verity of certain words,
Spoke by a holy monk. Shakspeare

Abd meleck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Alahomriten monk. Kneller

The drunken monks, the scorn and shame of man-kind.

Route and prepare once more to take possession,
And settle in their ancient lives again. Rome
Monks, in some respects agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Aylmer

MONKERY. n. f. [from monk.] The monastick life.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rule and unpolite votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monastery. Hall

MONKEY. n. f. [monikin, a little man.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.
One of them showed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tush! it was my turquoise, I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakspeare

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakspeare

Other creatures, as well as monkey eyes, destroy their young ones by their lech fondness. Locke
With glittering golden and sparkling gems they dote,
But ape and monkey eyes are the gods within. Granville

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.
This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakspeare

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father? Shakspeare

MONKHOOD. n. f. [monk and hood.] The character of a monk.

He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury

MONKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monastick; pertaining to monks; taught by monks.

Those public charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which the vanity boasts. Atterbury
Rise, rise, Rash common, see the Bischoff inside,
The dull contentment of monkish rhyme refine. South

MONKS-HOOD. n. f. [consolida regalis.] A plant.

MONKS-RHUBARB. n. f. A species of dock; its roots are used in medicine.

MONOCHORD. n. f. [μόνος and χορδή.]

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet machine. Harris

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds.

The ancients made use of the monochord to determine the proportion of sounds to one another. When the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unities; but if as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatessérons; if as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce-majeur; but if as six to five, then they called it a demiton, or a tierce-minor; and lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze, the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris

MONOCULAR. } adj. [μόνος and oculus.]
MONOCULOUS. } One-eyed; having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because she bowed before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Honcl

Those of China repute the rest of the world monocular. Glennville

MONODY. n. f. [μονωδία; monodie, Fr.] A poem sung by one person not in dialogue.

MONOGAMIST. n. f. [μόνος and γάμος; monogame, Fr.] One who disallows second marriages.

MONOGAMY. n. f. [monogamie, Fr. μόνος and γάμος.] Marriage of one wife.

MONOGRAM. n. f. [μόνος and γράμμα; monogramme, Fr.] A cipher; a character compounded of several letters.

MONOLOGUE. n. f. [μόνος and λόγος; monologue, Fr.] A scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.

He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden

MONOMACHY. n. f. [μονομαχία; μόνος and μάχη.] A duel; a single combat.

MONOME. n. f. [monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a b, a a b, a a a b. Harris

MONOPETALOUS. adj. [monopetale, Fr. μόνος and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy

MONOPOLIST. n. f. [monopoleur, Fr.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

TO MONOPOLIZE. v. a. [μόνος and πωλίσ; monopolier, Fr.] To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself. Arbuthnot

MONOPOLY. n. f. [μονοπωλία; monopoli, Fr. μόνος and πωλίω.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.

If I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't. Shakspeare

How could he answer't, should the state think fit, To question a monopoly of wit? Cowley

One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable, all others can concern only something without us, but this insinuates upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Govegnant of the Tongue

Shakspeare rather writ happily than knowingly and subtly; and Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden

MONOPTERE. n. f. [μόνος and πτερίς.] A noun used only in some one oblique case. Clarke's Latin Grammar

MONOSTICH. n. f. [μόνος and στιχον.] A composition of one verse.

MONOSYLLABICAL. adj. [from monosyllable.] Consisting of words of one syllable.

MONOSYLLABLE. n. f. [monosyllable, Fr. μόνος and σλλαβή.] A word of only one syllable.

My name of Ptolemy!
It is so long it takes an hour to write it:

I'll change it into Jove or Mars!
Or any civil monosyllable,
That will not tire my hand.

Poets, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy.

MONOSYLLABLED. adj. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine tailors, if rightly spell'd,
Into one man are monosyllabled.

MONOTONY. n. f. [monotonia; μῆτος and τόνος; monotone, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony.

MONSIEUR. n. f. [Fr.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl.

MONSOON. n. f. [monsoon, monsoon, Fr.]

Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds.

MONSTER. n. f. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

Methinks heroic poeise till now,
Like some fantastic lary land did flow,
Gods, devils, nymphs, witches, and giants race,
And all but man in man's chief work had place.
Thou like some worthy knight with sacred arms,
Dost drive the monster thence, and end the charms.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they are derived.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If she live long,
And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters.

All human virtue to its last breath,
Finds Envy never conquer'd but by death:
The great Alcides, ev'ry labour pail,
Had still this monster to subdue at last.

To MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things.

Not in use.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree
That monsters it.

I had rather one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarm was struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

MONSTROSITY. n. f. [from monstrous.]
MONSTROUSITY. n. f. The state of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstrosity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd.
Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in education: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast.

By the same law monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites.

MONSTROUS. adj. [monstreux, Fr. monstruosus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.

Nature there perversive,
Brought forth all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire.
Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul to his content,
That, from her working, all his visage wan'd?

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of tick.

3. Irregular; enormous.
No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
The whole at once is bold and regular.

4. Shocking; hateful.
This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to have the monstrous from their nation received.

MONSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again.

Add, that the rich have full a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor.

MONSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]

1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly.

Therius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age.

2. To a great or enormous degree.

And that self-chain about his neck,
Which he forewent most monstrously to have.

These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love.

MONSTROUSNESS. n. f. [from monstrous.]

Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.

See the monstrousness of man,
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!

MONTANT. n. f. [Fr.] A term in fencing.

Vat be all you, oar, two, tree, four, come for?
--To fer thee fight, to fee thee pals thy puncto,
thy shock, thy traverse, thy distance, thy montant.

MONTERO. n. f. [Spanish.] A horseman's cap.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero.

MONTEITH. n. f. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Monteth has by one vessel lost his name from death.

MONTH. n. f. [monat, Sax.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiac: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month.

Sejourne with my sister.

From a month old even unto five years old.

Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptic.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemned by fate

To daily death.

MONTH'S mind. n. f. Longing desire.

You have a month's mind to them.

For it a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
Who has not a month's mind to combat?

MONTHLY. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heavenly birth I view'd,
For whom our monthly victims are renew'd.

MONTHLY. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated.

O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That changes monthly in her circl'd orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

MONTOIR. n. f. [Fr.] In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup.

MONTRO'SS. n. f. An under-gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-maister.

MONUMENT. n. f. [monument, Fr. monumentum, Latin.]

1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Julius.

He is become a notable monument of unpolepious dissoluty.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of laurel from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages; and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums.

Of ancient British art
A pleasing monument, no less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Eusebian hands Arose.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
Shall on his monument their odours throw.

In a heap of slain,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd
Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument.

With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn.

MONUMENTAL. adj. [from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun burns to burn
His flaming beams, ne, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind.

The pulch'ed pillar different sculptures grace,
A world of cutl'ing monumental traits. Pope
2. Bask'd in the hour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Persistence keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shaksp.
I'll not fear that winter skin of lusty snow,
And smooth as marble shal'abaster. Shakspere.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Soitly may he be poss'd
Of his mortal soul. Crashaw.

MOOD, n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Lat.]
1. The form of an argument.
Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. the universal or particular affirmation or negation. Hatts Aristotle reduced our logic reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mood and figure.
Bohler.

2. Style of music.

They move
In perfect phalans, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton.
Their found seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint.
Milton.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clayke.

4. [from mod, Gothick; mod, Sax. mood, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.

The trembling ghost, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and flaring wide
With fiery eyes. Fairy Queen.
The kindly beast upon her jazing food,
With pity call'd, down fell his angry mood.
Fairy Queen

Eyes unfix'd to the melting mood,
Prop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their mead'ry gum. Shakspere.

Florida changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermeil cheeks depart. Fairy Soliman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knolles.
She was in fittest mood

For cutting orms, or letting blood. Hodibras.
These two knits 'C' appraise his angry mood
I bear, of which the fumes give him good. Dryd.
He now profuse of tears,

In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addis.
5. Angry; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothick, signifies habitual temper.

That which we move for our better misfortune's sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they eat forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must be contented. Hooker.

MOODY, adj. [from mood.]

1. Angry; out of humour.
How now, moody? Shakspere.
What is't thou canst demand?

Chide him rev'ently,
When you perceive his blood incline to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakspere
Every prey, moody mirth content
Shall fit the turtles' rabble in an appear. Rouse.

2. Mental; intellectual: mod in Saxon signifies the mind.

Give me some musick; musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakspere

MOON, n. f. [mun; mena, Gothick;
mena, Saxon; mona, Islandick; maene, Denish; mane, German; muen, Dutch.]

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phoebe.

The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as
this.

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspere.

Diana bath her name from moonen, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is believed to be a cold's humours. Peacham.

Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
Beneath the eternal firmament of waves,
Where the soft count the moon's waters keep,
And undisturb'd by moons in limbo creep. Cowley.
Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth!

2. A month. Amfworth.

3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.

MOON-BEAM, n. f. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.

The division and quivering, which please to move in music, have an agreement with the glimmering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave.
Bacon.

On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden.

MOON-CALF, n. f. [moon and calf.]

1. A monster; a false conception: supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.

How canst thou to be the beg of this moon-calf? Shakspere.

2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.
The potion works not on the part design'd,
But turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
The fotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.

MOON-EYED, adj. [moon and eye.]

1. Having eyes affected by the revolutions of the moon.

2. Dim-eyed; purblind. Amfworth.

MOON-FERN, n. f. [hemionitis, Latin.] A plant. Amfworth.

MOON-FISH, n. f.

Moon-fish is so called, because the tad has a flared like a half-moon, by which, and his odd trailed shape, he is ludicrously distinguished. Cree.

MOONLESS, adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.

Alit by a new, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden

MOONLIGHT, n. f. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.

Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moon-light, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible.

Then hast by moonlight at her window sang,
With leaping voice, verses of festal love. Shaksp.

MOONLIGHT, adj. Illuminated by the moon.

If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us. Shaksp.

What beck'ning doth along the moonlight shade
mutes my steps, and points to yonder glade? Pope.

MOONSTED, n. f. [menipserum, Lat.]

The moon-sted hath a rosetaceous flower, the pental is divided into three parts at the top, and afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon. Mittler.

MOONSHINE, n. f. [moon and shine.]

1. The lustre of the moon.

Punch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out.
Shakspere.

I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:

And, ere I was aware, light'd to myself. Dryden.

2. [In burlesque.] A month.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother. Shakspere.

MOONSHINE, } adj. [moon and shine.] Il-

MOONSHINY, } luminated by the moon:
both seem a popular corruption of moonshining.

Faint, black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshine revels, and shades of night. Shaksp.

Although it was a fair moonshiny night, the enemy thought not fit to assault them. Clarendon.

I went to see them in a moonshiny night. Addis.

MOONSTONE, n. f. A kind of stone. Amf.

MOONY, adj. [from moon.] Lunate; having a crescent for the standard resembling the moon.

Encount'ring fierce
The Solymean Sultan, he o'erthrew

His moony troops, returning bravely smear'd With Panna blood. Philips.

The Seldan galls th' Illyrian confit;

But soon the miscreant moony host
Before the victor cross shall fly. Fenton.

MOOR, n. f. [moer, Dutch; modder, Teutonic, clay.]

1. A marsh; a fen; a bog; a tract of low and watery grounds.

While in her girlish age she keep sheep on the moor, it chanced that a London merchant passing by saw her, and liked her, begged her of her poor parents, and carried her to his home. Carrar.

In the great level near Thorney, several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor.

Let the marsh of Eltham Bruges tell,
What colour were their waters that same day,
And all the moor 'twixt Eltham and Delf.

2. [maurus, Latin.] A negro; a black-a-moor.

I shall answer that better than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the moor is with child by you. Shakspere.

To Moor, v. a. [morer, Fr.] To fallen by anchors or otherwise.

Three more fierce Forns in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving land,
And in mud ocean left them moor'd at hand. Dry.

To Moor, v. n. To be fixed by anchors;
to be stationed.

Enus gain'd Cajeta's bay:
At length on oozy ground his gallees moor'd,
Their heads we turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

My vessel, driv'n by a strong gust of wind,
Moor'd in a Chan creek. Addis.

He visited the top of Taurus and the famous Ararat, where Noah's ark first moor'd. Arbuthnot

To blow a Moor, [at the fall of a deer, corrupted from a mort, Fr.] To sound the horn in triumph, and call in the whole company of hunters, Amfworth.

MOONCOCK, n. f. [moor and cock.] The male of the moorhen.

MOORHEN, n. f. [moor and hen.] A fowl that feeds in the fens, without web feet.

Water fowls, as fen-gulls and moorhens, when they flock and fly together from the sea towards the fens, forebode rain and wind. Bacon.

MOORISH, adj. [from moor.] Penny; marshy; watery.

In the great level near Thorney, several oaks and firs have lain there till covered by the inundation of the fens and salt waters, and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

Along the moorish fens

Sighs the sad genius of the coming storm. Thompson.

MOORLAND, n. f. [moor and land.] Marsh;
fen; watery ground.

In the south part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn, and they of the north to the south, except in the moorlands. Mortimer

M O P

Or like a bridge that joins a marsh
To morlands of a different parish.
Swift.
MOONSTONE. n. f. A species of granite.
The third stratum is of great rocks of moonstone and sandy earth. Woodward.

MOORY. adj. [from moor.] Marshy; fenney; watery.

As when thick mists arise from moory vales.

Fairfax.
In Essex, moory-land is thought the most proper.
Mortimer.

MOOSE. n. f. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.

To MOOT. v. a. [from morian, more, gemot, meeting together, Saxon; or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mot, French.] To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

Moot case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.

In this moot case your judgement to refuse,
Is present death. Dryden.

Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws? Locke.

Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a mafter Bull, or you a mafter Strutt. Arbutnot.

MOOTED. adj. Plucked up by the root;

Amfworth.
MOOTER. n. f. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.

MOP. n. f. [mappa, Welsh; mappa, Lat.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.

Such is that sprinkling which some careless queen
Flirts on you from her mop, but not to clean.
You fly, invoke the Gods; then turning, stop
To rail; she singing still whirls on her mop. Swift.

2. [perhaps corrupted from mock.] A wry mouth made in contempt.

Each one tripping on his toe
Will be here with mop and mow. Shakespeare.

To MOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.

To MOP. v. n. [from mock.] To make wry mouths in contempt.

Five heads have been in poor Tom at once; of Jest, as Obdicut; of Hobdildie, prince of dumbbells; Mahu, of fealing; Mohu, of murder; and Fibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since posses-sion's chamber-maids. Shakespeare.

An ass fell a mopping and braying at a lion. L'Eg.

To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant day-dream; to be spiritless, inactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers.

Shakespeare.
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, swelling fairs all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope. Shakespeare.

Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakespeare.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Deonack phreury, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madneis. Milton.

The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wailing of the midnight taper.

Rowe.

To MORE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.

They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.

Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke.

MORE-EYED. adj. Blind of one eye. Ainl.

MO'PPEY. } n. f. [perhaps from mop.] A MO'PSEY. } puppet made of rags, as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

Our sovereign lady: made for a queen?
With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in t'other.
A very pretty moppet! Dryden.

MO'PUS. n. f. [A cant word from mope.] A drone; a dreamer.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
But a rabble of tenants. Swift.

MORAL. adj. [moral, Fr. moralis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the practice of men toward each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal, good or bad.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.

Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral.

In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide life, but in supernatural it alone guideth. Hooker.

Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain.

The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain.
Dryden.

2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

France's reads, his banners in our noisels land,
With plumed helm the flag's begins his threats,
Whit thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and crift.

Shakespeare.

3. Popular; customary; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be infallible; and moral certainty may properly be sued indubitable.

We have found with a moral certainty, the feat of the Mosical shyls.

Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillot.

A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts.

MORAL. n. f.

1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.

Their moral and astronomy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction;
the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.

Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.

—Moral! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakespeare.

Expound the meaning of moral of his life and tokens. Shakespeare.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; the fable formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.

I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable,
but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.

To MORAL. v. n. [from the adjective.]
To moralize; to make moral reflections.

Not in use.

M O R

When I did hear

The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanicleer.
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shak.
MORALIST. n. f. [moraliste, Fr.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. f. [moralité, French; from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life;
ethicks.

The system of morality to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift.

A necessity of living is as impossible in morality,
as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Bak.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South.

To MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, Fr.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He has left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.

—I pray thee moralize them. Shakespeare.

Did he not moralize this spectacle?
—O yes, into a thousand humors. Shakespeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb.
L'Estrange.

2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Pierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize
my song. Spenser.

3. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, it indeed it has a sense.

High as their trumpet's tune his lyre he string,
And with his prince's arms he moralized his song.

Prior.

To MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. f. [from moralize.] He who moralizes.

MORALITY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally far called, honour, honesty, ought chiefly to be understood, and that the good of profit or pleasure, that is a title of judgment, hardly come into any account here. South.

Because this of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of respectation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally.

Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

Learn from the nature of the things themselves morally certain, and cannot make any doubt of it, but that a mind free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgment than such a one as is assailed by a thousand passions. Hobbes.

The common accounts of many such virtuous actions are morally, or as we might speak, absolutely impossible, that the things that be false.

Atterbury's Sermon.

MORALS. n. f. [without a singular.] The

MORROW. n. f. [morogen, Saxon; morghen, Dutch. The original meaning of morrow seems to have been morning, which being often referred to on the preceding day, was understood in time to signify the whole day next following.]

1. The day after the present day.

I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
To have't with saying good morrow. Shakspere.

Canst pluck night from me, but not lend a morrow. Shakspere.

The Lord did that thing on the morrow. Exodus.
Peace, good reader, do not weep,
Peace, the lovers are asleep;
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night is gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with the light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crowfoot.

To morrow you will live, you always cry,
In what far country doth this morrow lie?
That 'tis so mighty long e'er it arrive:
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis so far fetch'd this morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old, and very dear.
To morrow will I live, the fool does say,
To day itself's too late, the wife he'd yesterday. Cowley.

2. To MORROW. [This is an idiom of the same kind, supposing morrow to mean originally morning: as, to night; to day.]
On the day after this current day.
To morrow comes; 'tis noon; 'tis night;
This day like all the former flies;
Yet on he runs to seek delight
To morrow, till to night he dies. Prior.

3. To morrow is sometimes, I think improperly, used as a noun.
Our yesterday's to morrow now is gone,
And still a new to morrow does come on.
We by to morrows draw out all our store,
Till the exhausted well can yield no more. Cowley.
To morrow is the time when all to be rectified. Spectator.

MORSE. n. f. [phoca.] A sea-horse.
That which is commonly called a sea-horse is properly called a morse, and makes not out that shape. Brown.

It seems to have been a tusk of the morse or walrus, called by some the sea-horse. Woodward.

MORSEL. n. f. [morcellus, low Latin; from morfus.]

1. A piece fit for the mouth; a mouthful.

Yet canst thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully din'd before, Shakspere.
And me his parent would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his hate. Milton.
Every morsel to a tinsed hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South's Sermons.

He boils the fl-fl,
And lays the mangled morrels in a dish. Dryden.

A wretch is put to under,
Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe
In morrels cut to make it farther go. Tate.

A letter to the keeper of the lion requested that it may be the first morsel put into his mouth. Addison.

2. A piece; a meal.

On these herbs, and fruits and flowers,
Feed first, on each breast next, and fish and fowl,
No homely morrels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A dog crossing a river with a morsel of flesh in his mouth, saw, as he thought, another dog under the water, upon the very same adventure. L'Estrange.

As in a looking-glass, and to sigh as 'twere
The mort of th' deer; oh that is entertainment
My budon likes not. Shakspere.

2. [morgt, Islandick.] A great quantity.
Not in elegant use, but preserved colloquially in many parts.

MORTAL. adj. [mortalis, Lat. mortel, Fr.]

1. Subject to death; doomed sometime to die.

Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which perforce,
I her frail son amongst my brethren mortal
Must give my attendance to. Shakspere.
This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor.
Heavenly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime; and just, th' unjust to save. Milton.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state Shalt lose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.

Come all, bon spiritus
That tend on mortal thoughts, unless me here,
And fill me from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of cruelty. Shakspere's Macbeth.
The mortalest poisons practis'd by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and till our woe. Milt.
Some circumstances have been great discouragers of trade, and others are absolutely mortal to it.

Hope not, base man! I unquitted hence to go,
For I am Palamon, thy mortal foe. Spenser.

Safe in the hand of one disposing power,
Or in the fatal, or the mortal hour. Pope.

4. Inferring divine condemnation; not venial.

Though every sin of itself be mortal, yet all are not equally mortal, but some more, some less. Perkins.

5. Human; belonging to man.

They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. Shakspere.

Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakspere.

The voice of God
To mortal ear is dreadful, they in speech,
That Moses might report to them his will,
And terror create. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,
On first hand can always hit. Butler.

No one enjoyment but is liable to be lost by a thousand accidents, out of all mortal power to prevent.

6. Extreme; violent. A low word.

The birds were in a mortal apprehension of the hotters, till the sparrow reasoned them into understanding. L'Estrange.

The nymph grew pale and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight,
And now departing, cast a mournful look Upon the fire now. Dryden.

MORTAL. n. f.

1. Man; human being.

Wary poor mortals be behind. Tieckel.

2. This is often used in ludicrous language.

I can behold no mortal now;
For what's in eye without a brow? Prior.

MORTALITY. n. f. [from mortal.]

1. Subjection to death; state of a being subject to death.

When I saw her die,
I then did think on your mortality. Carroll.

I point out mistakes in life and religion, that we might guard against the springs of error, guilt, and sorrow, which surround us in every state of mortality.

Watts.

2. Death.

I beg mortality,
Rather than life preferred with infamy. Shaksp.
Gladly would I meet Mortality my sentence. Milton.

3. Power of destruction.

Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Lave in thy tongue and heart. Shaksp.

4. Frequency of death.

The rule of keeping those accounts first began in the year 1592, being a time of great mortality. Grant.

I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

MORTAR, n. f. [mortarium, Lat. mortier, French.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

I except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and pound it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Brown.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the comminution of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar.

Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.

It is one which for nine centuries had bray'd
The wrath of time on the stone engrav'd,
Now only mortars stand yet undecay'd.
On soldier trophies by thy valour rais'd. Granville.

MORTAR, n. f. [morter, Dutch; mortier, Fr.]

Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mix'd up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubb'd, yet not earthy, so as to soil the water it is wash'd in. The mason's fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and be become they use it, then fore he advises, that you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not be long before it be used.

I will treat this unbolted villain into mortar, and dash the salt of a jakes with him. Shaksp.

They had brack for stone, and thine for mortar.

Gunpowder.

Lime hot out of the kiln mix'd soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

MORTGAGE, n. f. [mort and gage, Fr.]

1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

The estate is mortgaged, and mortgages are made,
their names run, and their names betray'd. Dry.

The mortgagor do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbuthnot.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-streets, and saves th' expensive coach,
Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.

The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon.
To MORTGAGE, v. a. [from the noun.]
To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.

Let men contrive how they may disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Pity.

They make the widow's mortgage'd ox their prey.

Sandys.

Their not abating of their expensive way of living, has forced them to mortgage their best manors. Arbuthnot.

Some have his lauds, but none his treasure'd store, Lands unmanur'd by us, and mortgage'd o'er and o'er. Harte.

MORTGAGEE, n. f. [from mortgage.] He that takes or receives a mortgage.

An act may pass for publick registers of land,
by which all purchasers or mortgagees may be secured of all monies they lay out. Temple.

MORTGAGER, n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFYING, adj. [mortifier, Lat.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quit from Christ's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from to dead, so mortifying a state, and permit him to give them life. Hamm.

These murmurings, like a mortifying herb, are poisonous even in their first spring. Gov. of the Tong.

MORTIFICATION, n. f. [mortification, Fr.
from mortify.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.

It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by ulcers, or milder colds. Bacon.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immediate,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene,
To black mortification. Milton.

2. Destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediment to union or resis-tation, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkalescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbuthnot.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.

You see no real mortification, or self-denial, no eminent charity, no profound humility, no heavenly affection, no true contempt of the world, no christian weakness, no sincere zeal, or eminent piety, in the common lives of christians. Jam.

5. Vexation; trouble.

It is one of the vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disorder'd by a tedious visit. L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratisbon. Addison.

To MORTIFY, v. a. [mortifier, Fr.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or spirit. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drank them up. Hakeus.

Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.

The breath no longer left his father's body,
But that his wife's, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shaksp.

Suppress thy flowing pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust.
Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harass; in order to reduce the body to compliance with the mind.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shaksp.

We mortify ourselves with fast, and think we fare courteously if we abstain from flesh. Brown.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.

With fasting mortify'd, worn out with tears,
And bent beneath the load of seventy years. Harte.

5. To humble; to deprecate; to vex.

Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shaksp.

He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. Addison.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise to high as he thinks they ought. Addison.

To MORTIFY, v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.

Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flies with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrefy. Bacon.

2. To be subdued; to die away.

3. To practise religious severities.

This makes him careful of every temper of his heart, give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness and humanity. Jam.

MORTIFY, n. f. [mortaise, mortoise, Fr.]

A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shaksp.

Under one skin are parts variously mingled, some with cavities, as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.

To MORTIFY, v. a.

1. To cut a mortise; to join with a mor-tise.

'Tis a maffy wheel,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd. Shaksp.

The walls of spiders legs are made,
Well mortis'd and finely bud. Drayton.

2. It seems in the following passage improperly used:

The one half of the ship being finished, and by help of a screw launched into the water, the other half was joined by great brass nails mortis'd with lead. Arbuthnot.

MORTMAIN, n. f. [morte and main, Fr.]

Such a state of possession as makes it unalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand, in a hand that cannot shift away the property.

It were meet that some small portion of lands were allotted, since no more mortmains are to be look'd for. Spenser.

MORTPAY, n. f. [mort and pay.] Dead pay; payment not made.

The parliament was merely a parliament of war, with those statutes concurring therewith; as the severe punishing of mortpayers, and keeping back of soldiers wages. Bacon.

MORTRESS, n. f. [from mortier de sagefle.
Shinner.] A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak.

Bacon.

MOSAICK. adj. [mosaïque, Fr. supposed corrupted from musæus, Lat.]

Mosaick is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings.

Each beauteous flower,
Tis all hues, roses, and jessamine;
Hear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

Mosaick. Milton.
The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mosaick pavement, the which I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture.

MOSCHATEL. n. f. [moschatellina, Lat.] A plant.

MOSQUE. n. f. [mosquée, Fr. moschit, Turkish.] A Mahometan temple.

MOSS. n. f. [muscus, Lat. moor, Sax.] A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excrement produced from the earth's d drees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art. The botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees. The only remedy in such cases is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining, and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but it may be better sort of as a rudiment of germination.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining ozers tenc'd, and moss their beds.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places, have seeds that, when taken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke.

To Moss. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whole boughs were moss'd with age,
And high-top bald with dry antiquity.

That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out.

MOSSEY. n. f. [from mossy.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.

The herbs withered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and to do the mossiness of trees.

MOSSEY. adj. [from mossy.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

Old trees are more mossy far than young, for that the top is not so frank as to rise all to the boughs, but first by the way, and putteth out moss.

About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all inferior beauteous things.

The mossy mountains and the sylvan shades Delight no more.

MOST. adj. the superlative of more. [maest, Sax. moet, Dutch.]

1. Consisting of the greatest number; consisting of the greatest quantity.

It is as a rotten thing consumeth, as a garment that is moth eaten.

M O T

Let moths through pages eat their way,
Your wars, your loves, your praises be forgot,
And make of all an universal blot.

MOTHER. n. f. [moeder, Sax. moder, Danish; moeder, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has born a child; correlative to son or daughter.

Let thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness.

2. That which has produced any thing.

Also, poor country! It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave.

3. That which has preceded in time; as, a mother church to chapels.

4. That which requires reverence and obedience.

5. Hysterical passion; so called, as being imagined peculiar to women.

6. A familiar term of address to an old woman; or to a woman dedicated to religious austerities.

7. [moeder, Dutch, from moeder, mud.] A thick substance concreting in liquors; the lees or scum concentered.

8. [moet properly modder, modde, Dutch.] A young girl. Now totally obsolete.

3. Animal life and action.
Devoid of sense and motion.

Milton.

The soul
O'er ministerial members does preside,
To all their various provinces divide,
Each member move, and every motion guide.

Blackmore.

4. Manner of moving the body; port; gait.
Speaking or mute, all conclusions and grace
Attend thee, and each word, each motion form.

Milton.

Virtue too, as well as vice, is clad
In flesh and blood to well, that Plato had Beheld, what his high fancy once embrac'd,
Virtue with colours, flesh and motion grac'd.

Wall.

5. Change of posture; action.
By quick instinctive motion up I sprung.

Milton.

Encour'g'd thus the brought her younglings nigh,
Watching the motions of her patient's eye.

Dryden.

6. Military march, or remove.

See the guards

By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion.

Milton.

7. Agitation; intestine action.

My womb

Prodigious motion felt, and useful throes.

Milton.

Cease, cease thou foaming ocean,
For what's thy troubled motion

Gay.

10. Direction; tendency.

In our proper motion we ascend.

Milton.

9. Impulse communicated.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation, were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God.

Raleigh.

Cumulus within raises all the cumulation without: this is the great wheel to which the clock owes its motion.

Dryden.

Love awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And breathing o'er, adds motion to the pool.

Dryden.

10. Tendency of the mind; thought impressed.
Let a good man obey every good motion rising in his heart, knowing that every such motion proceeds from God.

South.

11. Proposal made.

What would you wish me?

—Your father and my uncle have made motions;
if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole.

Shakespeare.

If our queen and this young prince agree,
I'll join my younger daughter, and my joy,
To him forthwith, in holy wedlock bands.

Shakespeare.

—Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion.

Shakespeare.

12. [In old language.] A puppet-show.
He compass'd a motion of the prodigal son, and married a tinker's wife, within a mile where my land lies.

Shakespeare.

To MOTION, v. a. [from the noun.] To propose.

MOTIONLESS, adj. [from motion.] Wanting motion; being without motion.
We cannot free the lady that sits here,

Milton.

In stony fetters hat, and motionless.
Ha! Do I dream? Is this my hop'd success?

Dryden.

I grow a statue, stiff and motionless.
Should our globe have had a greater share
Of this strong force, by which the parts cohere;
Things had been bound by such a pow'ful chain,
That all would fix'd and motionless remain.

Blackm.

MOTIVE, adj. [motivus, Lat.]

1. Causing motion; having moment.
Shall every motive argument used in such kind of conferences be made a rule for others still to conclude the like by, concerning all things of like nature, when as probable inducements may lead them to the contrary?

Hooker.

2. Having the power to move; having power to change place; having power to pass foremost to motion.
The nerves serve for the conveyance of the motive faculty from the brain; the ligatures for the strengthening of them, that they may not flag in motion.

Willans.

We ask you whence does motive vigour flow?

Blackmore.

That fancy is easily disproved from the motive power of souls embodied, and the gradual increase of men and animals.

Bentley.

MOTIVE, n. f. [motif, French.]

1. That which determines the choice; that which incites the action.

Hence we have no commandment, either in nature or Scripture, which doth exact them at our hands; yet those motives there are in both, which draw most effectually our minds unto them.

Hooker.

Why in that rashness left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave-taking?

Shakespeare.

What can be a stronger motive to a firm trust on our Maker, than the giving us his son to suffer for us?

Addison.

The motive for continuing in the same state is only the present satisfaction in it; the motive to change is always some uneasiness.

Locke.

2. Mover. Not in use.
Heaven brought me up to be my daughter's dowe
As it hath sated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband.

Shakespeare.

Her wanton spirits look out
At every joint, and motive of her body.

Shakespeare.

MOTLEY, adj. [supposed to be corrupte from medley, perhaps from mothlike coloured, spotted or variegated like a garden moth.] Mingled of various colours.

They that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd.

Shakespeare.

Expense and after-thought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair.

Dryden.

Enquire from whence this motley style
Did first our Roman purity defile.

Dryden.

Tranquil, of amphibious breed,
Motley fruit of mangral feed;
By the dam from lordings sprung,
By the fire exhal'd from dung.

Swift.

MOTOR, n. f. [motor, Fr. from movco
Lat.] A mover.

Those bodies being of a congenerous nature, de-readily receive the impressions of their motor, and if not fettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite unto their animator.

Brown.

MOTORRY, adj. [motorius, Lat.] Giving motion.

The bones, were they dry, could not, without great difficulty, yield to the plucks and attractions of the motory muscles.

Ray.

MOTTO, n. f. [motto, Italian.] A sentence or word added to a device, or prefixed to any thing written.

It may be said to be the motto of human nature,
rather to suffer than to die.

L'Estrange.

We ought to be meek-spirited, till we are assured of the honesty of our ancestors, for covetousness and circumvention make no good motto for a coat.

Coll.

It was the motto of a bishop eminent for his piety and good works in king Charles the second's reign,
Inferri Deo & latere, Serve God and be cheerful.

Addison.

To MOVE, v. a. [moveo, Lat.]

1. To put out of one place into another;
to put in motion.

Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God.

Psalms.

At this my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

Job.

2. To give an impulse to.

He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him; longer than they move;
His heart I know, how variable and vain

Self-left.

Milton.

The pretext of piety is but like the hand of a clock, set indeed more conspicuously, but directed wholly by the secret movings of carnality within.

Dryden.

The will being the power of directing our operative faculties to some action, for some end, cannot at any time be moved towards what is judged at that time in attainable.

Locke.

3. To propose; to recommend.

If the suit consultation be not sufficient, the will may move a review, and require the understanding to inform itself better.

Bishop Branchall.

They are to be blamed alike, who move and who decline war upon particular respects.

Hayward.

They find a great inconvenience in moving their suits by an interpreter.

Davies.

To Indamora you my suit must move.

Dryden.

4. To persuade; to prevail on; to dispose by something determining the choice.

A thousand knees,
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods

Shakespeare.

To look that way thou wert.

Kneller.

Gratus offered the Transylvanian money; but minds desirous of revenge were not moved with gold.
Sometimes the possibility of preferment prevailing with the credulous, expectation of less expence

MOV

with the covetous, opinion of safe with the fond, and assurance of remoteness with the unkind parents, have moved them without discretion, to engage their children in adventures of learning, by whose return they have received but small contentment. Watson.

Could any power of sense the Roman move
To burn his own right hand? Davies.

That which moves a man to do any thing, must be the apprehension and expectation of some good from the thing which he is about to do. South.

When the law her reasons idly spent,
And could not move him from his fix'd intent,
She flew to rage. Dryden.

But when no female arts his mind could move,
She turn'd to furious hate her impious love. Dryd.
What can thy mind to this long journey move,
Or need'st thou absence to renew thy love? Dryd.

5. To affect; to touch pathetically; to stir passion.

If he see aught in you that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will. Shaksp.

It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Shakespeare.

Should a shipwreck'd sailor sing his woe,
Would'st thou be mov'd to pity, or below
An alms? Dryden's Persius.

Images are very sparingly to be introduced: their proper place is in poems and orations, and their use is to move pity or terror, compassion and reluctance. Felton on the Cliffs.

O let thy sister, daughter, handmaid move,
Or all those tender names in one, thy love. Pope.

6. To make angry.

From those bloody hands
Throw your dissembler'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your mured prince. Shak.

7. To put into commotion.

When they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was moved about them. Ruth.

8. To incite; to produce by incitement.

Then feed on thoughts, that voluntarily move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

9. To conduct regularly in motion.

They, as they move
Their stately dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp. Milton.

10. To move. v. n.

1. To be in a state of changing place; not to be at rest.

Whether heav'n move or earth
Imports not, if thou reckon right. Milton.
The senses represent the earth as immovable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glauville.

2. To have a particular direction of passage.

The sun
Had first his precept to move, to shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat. Milton.

3. To go from one place to another.

I look'd toward Broom, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wou'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryd.

This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.

When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.

The goldefs moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope.

4. To have vital action.

In him we live, move, and have our being. A. C.

MOV

Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. Genesis.

5. To walk; to bear the body.

See great Marcellus how murr'd in toils
He moves with manly grace, how rich with regal spoils. Dryden's Æneis.

6. To march as an army.

Anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood. Milton.

7. To go forward.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium. Dryden's Æneis.

8. To change the posture of the body in ceremony.

When Hatan saw Mordecai that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation. Ezra.

MOVE, n. f. The act of moving, commonly used at chiefs.

I saw two angels play'd the mate;
With man alas no otherwife it proves,
An unseen hand makes all their moves. Cowley.

MOVABLE, adj. [from move.]

1. Capable of being moved; not fixed; portable; such as may be carried from place to place.

In the vast wilderness when the people of God had no settled habitation, yet a movable tabernacle they were commanded of God to make. Hosker.

When he made his prayer, he found the boat he was in moveable and unbound, the rest remained still fast. Bacon.

Any heat whatsoever promotes the ascent of mineral matter, which is subtle, and is consequently moveable more easily. Woodward.

Any who fees the feverone must conclude it to be one of the most moveable rivers in the world, that it is to often lashed out of one channel into another. Addison on Italy.

2. Changing the time of the year.

The lunar month is natural and periodical, by which the moveable festivals of the christian church are regulated. Hobbes.

MOVABLES, n. f. [from move, Fr.] Goods; furniture distinguished from real or immoveable possessions, as lands or houses.

We seize
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereout our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd. Shak.

Let him that moved you hither,
Remove you hence; I knew you at the first
You were a moveable.

—Why, what's a moveable?
—A join'd stool. Shakespeare.

Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.

MOVABLENESS, n. f. [from moveable.]

The honey, though untouched, will remain moveable as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.

The Grecian phalanx, moveable as a tower,
On all sides batter'd, yet still his power. Pope.

MOVEMENT, n. f. [from movement, French.]

1. Manner of moving.

What further relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introducing pathetic inconsistencies about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity. Pope's Essay.

Under workmen are expert enough, but making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swift.

2. Motion.

Could he whose laws the rolling planets bind,
Define or his own movement of the mind. Pope.

MOVENT, adj. [from move, Lat.] Moving.

MOU

If it be in some part moveable, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and is no radius. Græw's Geomet.

MOVANT, n. f. [from move, Latin.] That which moves another.

That there is a motion which makes the vicissitudes of day and night, sense may assure us; but whether the sun or earth be the common movant, cannot be determined but by a further appeal. Glau.

MOV'ER, n. f. [from move.]

1. The person or thing that gives motion.

O thou eternal mover of the heav'ns,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch. Shaksp.
The strength of a spring were better assisted by the labour of some intelligent mover, as the heavenly orbs are supposed to be turned. Wilkins.

2. Something that moves, or stands not still.

You as the soul, as the first mover, you
Vigour and life on every part bestow.
So orbs from the first mover motion take,
Yet each their proper revolutions make. Dryden.

3. A proposer.

See here these movers, that do prize their honours
At a crack'd draught; cushion, leaden spoons, Lie yet the night be done, pack up. Shaksp.

If any question be moved concerning the doctrine of the church of England expressed in the thirty-nine articles, give not the least ear to the movers thereof. Bacon.

MOVING, participial adj. [from move.]

Great Jupiter,
The moving prayer of Aeneas did grant,
And into men and women turn'd the ant. Blackm.

MOVINGLY, adj. [from moving.] Pathetically; in such a manner as to seize the passions.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Milvus do both more briefly and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hosker.

I would have had them write more movingly. Shakespeare.

His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Spoke all so movingly in his behalf,
I durst not trust myself to hear him talk. Addison.

MOVING, for might. Obsolete.

MOULD, n. f. [from morgel, Swedish.]

1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.

All metals are susceptible of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.

Mould is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or putrefaction, for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in action, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Natural History.

The malt made in summer is apt to contract mould. Mortimer.

A mould, who has been shut up in himself in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his arts are unwardness in the world. Watts.

2. [mou'b, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.

The moulds that are of a bright chestnut or hazel colour are accounted the best; next to that the dark grey and pullet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash colour are reckoned the worst, though the dark ash colour is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but yew, furz, and fern. All good land, whether it be breaking up by the spade, will en it a good mould; that being always the best that is either to sown or to lean, but such a will easily dissolve; of a just confidence between soil and clay. Miller.

MOU

Though worms devour us, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sundya.
The black earth, every where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.
3. Matter of which any thing is made.
When the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man. Dryden.

Nature form'd me other fatter mould,
Envolv'd all my soul with tender passions
And link me even below my weak sex. Addison.
4. [moule, Spanish; moule, French.] The matrix in which any thing is cast, or receives its form.

If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared, it may be perceived they had all one original mould. Hooker.

A dangerous precedent were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker.
French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was form'd. Shakespeare.

You may have fruit to more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon.

The liquid ore he dropp'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
Earth his own tools; then what might else be wrought Futile, or grav'd in metal. Milton.

We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as it this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and corrupt parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.

Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are call the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.

5. Cast; form.

No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shaksp.
William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould and making, being the most universally beloved of any man of that age; and, having a great office, he made the court itself better disposed, and more reverenced in the country. Clarendon.

Nor virtue, wit, nor beauty, could Preserve from death's hand this their heavenly mould. Carver.

Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Of substance, how endu'd, and what their pow'r.
And where their weakness. Milton.
So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould. Waller.
From their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryden.

Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
Married a lass of London mould. Prior.

6. The future or contexture of the skull,

Ainsworth.
7. It is used in a sense a little strained by Shakespeare.

New honours come upon him,
I like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
But with the end of life. Shakespeare.

To MOULD, v. n. [from the noun.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould.

In woods, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
And will be found with peril and with pain;
Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
Vain her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen.

Hee be some houses wherein sweet moats will seal, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.

To MOULD, v. a. To cover with mould;
to corrupt by mould.

Very coarse, heavy, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, raising against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Knight.

To MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form; to shape; to model.
I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shakespeare.

MOU

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak;
Why this was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish! He, he, tis lewd. Shakespeare.

The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolv'd to make him a molder-piece, and to mould him pistolically to his own idea. Wotton.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mould me man?
He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the imperfections of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and vernal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of rest and gold. Dunclad.

A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.

*For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to complete it every way,
He mould'd it with female clay. Swift.

moulds.

To MOULDER, v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished; to wear or waste away.

If he had sat still, the enemy's army would have mouldered to nothing, and been exposed to an advantage he would take. Clarendon.

Whatever moulders, or is wasted away, is carried into the lower grounds, and nothing brought back again. Burnet.

Those ruined stones despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces. Woodward.

To them by smiling Jove 'twas giv'n,
Great William's glories to recall.

When statues moulder, and when arches fall, Prior,
Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolv'd to give his parish a little Latin in his turn. Spectator.

To MOULDER, v. a. [from mould.] To turn to dust; to crumble.

The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been mouldered with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.

With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some, hostile fury. Pope.

MOULDERING, n. f. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.

Flies, fish, and plants, after a mouldering, rottenness, or corrupting, will fall to breed worms. Bacon.

mental cavities in wood or stone.

Hollow mouldings are required in the wack. Mason.

MOULDWARP, n. f. [mold and peccan, Saxon.] This is I believe the proper and original name of the talpa: a mould-warp is a creature that turns mould. The word is still retained, though sometimes pronounced 'mouldquarp.' A mole; a small animal that throws up the earth.

Above the reach of doubtful final lust,
Whose hate effect through cowardly distrust
Of his own wings, dare not to heaven fly,
But like a mouldwarp in the earth doth lie. Spenser.

While they play the mouldwarps, unfavoury damps disemper their heads with annoyance only for the present. Carver.

MOU

With gins we barrow the vermin of the earth, namely, the scab and the mouldwarp. Walton.

MOULTRY, adj. [from mould.] Overgrown with concretions.

—Yea.

—Tis the more time thou wert us'd.

—Ha, ha, ha; most excellent. Things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John. Shakespeare.

The marble looks white, as being exposed to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserve it from that mouldy colour which others contract. Addison.

To MOULT, v. n. [muyten, Dutch.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.

Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breasts, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.

True shall moult away his wings,
E'er he shall discover
In the whole wide world again
Such a constant lover. Swelling.

The widow'd turtle hangs her moulting wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings. Garth.

To MOUNCH, } v. a. [mouch, to eat much.
To MAUNCH, } Ainsworth. This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the obtunded action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean.

A sailor's wife had chelms in her lap.
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht. Shaksp.

MOUND, n. f. [munbian, Saxon, to de-woman, this Latin will be much what the same with a solentum. Atterbury.

MUCH is often used in a kind of composition with participles both active and passive: when it is joined with a passive, as much loved, it seems to be an adverb; when it is joined with an active, as much enduring, it may be more properly considered as a noun.

MUMMY. n. f. [mumie, Fr. mumia, Lat., derived by Salmagius from ammum, by Bochart from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damp: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is prepared in vials, or fall'd to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscid fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell, in its undisturbed state it is a thick, slimy substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be sold in an oven till the juices are exhaled and the embalming matter has penetrated.

The fit
Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Confer'd of maiden hearts. Shakspeare.

from a diet of salt flesh or fish, antiscorbatic vegetables may be given with success, but tempered with acids. Arbuthnot.

MURK, n. f. [morck, Danish, dark.] Darkness; want of light.

For twice in murk and accidental damp,
Moth Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp. Shak.

MURK, n. f. Hulks of fruit. Ainsworth.

MURKY, adj. [morck, Danish.] Dark;
cloudy: wanting light.

The murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion
Shall never melt mine honour into lust. Shakespeare.

So scented the grim feature, and up-turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air,
Sagacious of his quarry. Milton.

A murky storm deep low'ring o'er our heads
Hung imminent, that with impetuous gloom
Oppos'd itself to Cynthia's silver ray. Addison.

MURMUR, n. f. [murmur, Lat. murmure,
Fr.]

1. A low shrill noise.

Flame us it moveth within itself, or is blown by a bellows, giveth a murmur or interior sound. Bacon.

When the wing'd colonies first tempt the fly,
Or it ting, seize the sweets the blossoms yield,
Then a low murmur runs along the field. Pope.

Black Melancholy fits,
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

2. A complaint half suppressed; a complaint not openly uttered.

Some discontent there are; some idle murmurs;
How idle murmurs!

The doors are all shut up; the weather's foit,
With whims across, and hats upon their eyes,
Walk to and fro before their shut eyes. Dryden.

To MURMUR, v. a. [murmuro, Lat. murmur, Fr.]

1. To give a low shrill sound.

The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Can scarce be heard to high. Shakespeare.
And on the around whole rocky shore
The jureils murmur, and the surges roar,

The busy bees with a soft murmuring strain,
Invite to gentle sleep the whirring swain. Dryden.

2. To grumble; to utter secret and sullen discontent: with at before things, and against before persons.

The good we have enjoy'd from heav'n's free will;

And shall we murmur to endure the ill? Dryden.
Murmur not at your sickness, for thereby you will sin against God's providence. Wake.

The good consequences of this scheme, which will execute itself without murmuring against the government, are very visible. Saunders.

MURMURER, n. f. [from murmur.] One who repines; one who complains sullently; a grumbler; a repiner; a com-plainer.

It was his peace to with him!
That's a christian care enough; for living murmurers
There's places of rebuke. Shakespeare.

The murmurer is turned off to the company of those doleful creatures, which were to inhabit the rums of Babylon. Government of the Tongue.

Still might the discontent of murmurer cry,
Ah hapless fate of man! ah wretch doom'd once to die. Blackmore on the Creation.

MURRIAT, n. f. [marreffe, Fr. from morner, to rum.] Four cards of a sort.

Skinner and Ainsworth.

MURRAIN, n. f. [The etymology of this word is not clear; mur is an old word for a catarrh, which might well answer to the glanders; muriana, low Latin.
Skinner derives it from mori, to die.]

The plague in cattle.
Away ragged rans, cure I what murrain kill?

Some trials would be made of mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milt,
to fatten, or to keep them from murrain. Bacon.

A hollow'd hand
Could tell what murrains, in what months begun.

MURRY, n. f. A kind of bird.

Among the first sort we reckon coots, meawes,
murre, criers, and curlews. Curew.

MURRY, adj. [morre, Fr. morello, Italian;
from moro, a moor.] Darkly red.

And in their basket-hilts their bevy rag'd brew'd. King.

MURTH of Corn, n. f. Plenty of grain.

MUSCADEL, } adj. [muscat, muscadel, MUSCADINE, } Fr. muscatello, Italian; either from the fragrance resembling the nutmeg, mus muscata, or from musca, a fly: flies being eager of those grapes.]

A kind of sweet grape, sweet wine, and sweet pear.

He quaffs off the muscadel,
And threw the tops all in the sexton's face. Shak.

MUSCLE, n. f. [muscle, Fr. musculus, Lat.
muscula, Sax.]

1. Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, enclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vesicles or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries, and nerves to open; for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres.

The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body.

2. A bivalve shellfish.

Of shell-fish, there are wrinkles, limpets, cockles, and muscles. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
It is the observation of Aristotle, that oysters and muscles grow fuller in the waxing of the moon.

Two pair of small muscle shells were found in a limestone quarry.

MUSCO'SITY. n. f. [muscosus, Lat.] Mossiness.

MUSCULAR. adj. [from musculus, Latin.] Relating to muscles; performed by muscles.

By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of the liquids are thrown out of the body.

MUSCULARITY. n. f. [from muscular.] The state of having muscles.

The guts of a surgeon, taken out and cut to pieces, will still move, which may depend upon their great thickness and muscularity.

MUSCULOUS. adj. [musculosus, Fr. musculosus, Lat.]

1. Full of muscles; brawny.

2. Pertaining to a muscle.

The uvea has a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole, called the pupil of the eye, for the better moderating the transillumination of light.

MUSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Deep thought; close attention; absence of mind; brown study.

The tidings strange did him abashed make,
That still he sat long time astonished
As in great muse, no word to creature spoke.

He was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse, to hear
Of things so high and strange.

2. The power of poetry.

Begin my muse.
The muse-inspired train
Triumph, and raise their drooping heads again.

Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast,
The muse shall sing, and what the songs shall last.

To MUSE. v. n. [musar, Fr. musen, Dut. musen, Latin.]

1. To ponder; to think close; to study in silence.

If he spoke courteously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he mus'd upon some dangerous plot.

St. Augustine, speaking of devout men, noteth, how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they give unto the chapters read; how careful they were to remember the same, and to muse thereupon by themselves.

When he hath wai'd of taking kingdoms in,
Besow'd his life on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and my heart
Muse of understanding.

Her face upon a sudden glittered, so that I was Afraid of her, and mus'd what it might be.

All men mus'd in their hearts of John, whether He were the Christ or not.

On those he mus'd within his thoughtful mind.

We muse to much on the one, that we are apt to Overlook and forget the other.

Man superiour walks
Amid the glad creation, musing praise,
And looking lively gratitude.

2. To be absent of mind; to be attentive to something not present; to be in a brown study.

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks?
And given my treasures and my rights of thee,
To thick-ey'd musing and cur'd melancholy?

You suddenly arose and walk'd about,
Musing and fighting with your arms across.

Feels sudden terror and cold shivering,
Lifts not to eat, still muses, sleeps unbound.

3. To wonder; to be amazed.

Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will.

I have a strange infirmity.

MUSFUL. adj. [from mus.] Deep thinking; silently thoughtful.

Full of musful moping, which preface
The loss of reason, and conclude in rage.

MUSER. n. f. [from mus.] One who muses; one apt to be absent of mind.

MUSER. n. f. [in hunting.] The place through which the hare goes to relief.

MUSEUM. n. f. [muſeion.] A repository of learned curiosities.

MUSHROOM. n. f. [myſhroom, French.]

1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered.

The true champignon or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and exaltate themselves almost to a stink, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot-beds.

2. An upstart; a wretch risen from a dung-
hill.

Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unfown; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town.

MUSHROOMSTONE. n. f. [myſhroom and stone.] A kind of fossil.

Fifteen mushroomstones of the same shape.

MUSICK. n. f. [muſik, Fr.]

1. The science of harmonical sounds,
The man that hath no musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concert of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treason.

Now look into the musick-master's gaze,
Where noble youth at vast expense is taught,
But eloquence not val'd at a great.

2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.

When she spake,
Sweet words, like dropping honey, she did shed;
And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make.

Such musick
Before was never made,
But when of old the fount of morning sung.

By musick minds an equal temper know,
Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
Warriours the fires with animated fount is,
Fours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds.

We have dancing-masters and musick-masters.

3. Entertainments of instrumental harmony.
What musick, and dancing, and diversions, and songs, are to many in the world, that prayers and devotions, and psalms are to you.

MUSICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]

1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.

The merry birds
Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
And made amongst themselves a sweet comfort,
That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort.

Sweet bird that shunn'd the noise of folly.
Most musical, most melancholy;
These chauntress oft the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song.

Neither is it enough to give his author's sense,
In poetical expressions and in musical numbers.

2. Belonging to musick.

Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern musick.

MUSICALLY. adv. [from musical.] Harmoniously; with sweet sound.

Shun'd Phædra's arms.

MUSICALNESS. n. f. [from musical.] Harmony.

MUSICIAN. n. f. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.

Though the musicians that should play to you,
Stand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.

A painter may make a better face than ever was;
but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in musick, and not by rule.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung;
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young.

MUSK. n. f. [muschio, Italian; musc, Fr.]

A dry, light, and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochinchina:
the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common gout, but taller: the bag which contains the musk is three inches long, and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly.

Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours, as civet and musk.

And speech, th' effect of reason? To the mute
My speech is lost; my reason to the brute. Dryd.

Mute solemn furrow, free from female noise,
Such as the majesty of grief distills. Dryden.

2. Having nothing to say.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.

All sat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts. Milton.

All the heavenly choir stood mute,
And silence was in heav'n. Milton.

The whole perplex'd ignoble crowd,
Mute to my questions, in my praises loud, Echo'd the word. Prior.

MUTE. n. f.

1. One that has no power of speech.

Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth. Shakespeare.

Your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let my eyes not see. Shakespeare.

He that never hears a word spoken, no wonder if he remains speechless; as one must do, who from an infant should be bred up amongst mutes, and have no teaching. Holder.

Let the figures, to which art cannot give a voice, imitate the mutes in their actions. Dryden.

2. A letter which without a vowel can make no found.

Grammarians note the easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid, which doth not therefore necessarily make the preceding vowel long. Holder's Elements of Speech.

TO MUT. v. n. [mutir, Fr.] To sing as birds.

M U T

Mine eyes being open, the sparrows muted warm dung into mine eyes. Tobit.

I could not fright the crows,

Driving dumb Silence from the portal door,
Where she had mutely sat two hours before. Milton.

TO MUTILATE. v. a. [mutiler, Fr. mutilo, Lat.] To deprive of some essential part.

Such fearing to concede a monstrosity, or mutilate the integrity of Adam, preventively conceive the creation of thirteen ribs. Brown.

Sylburgius justly complains that the placo is mutilated. Stillingfleet.

Among the mutilated poets of antiquity there is none whose fragments are so beautiful as those of Sappho. Addison.

Aristotle's works were corrupted, from Strabo's account of their having been mutilated and consumed with moisture. Baker.

MUTILATION. n. f. [mutilation, Fr. mutilatio, from mutilo, Lat.] Deprivation of a limb, or any essential part.

The subject hath been oppressed by fines, imprisonments, mutilations, pillories, and banishments. Clarendon.

Mutilations are not transmitted from father to son, the blind begetting such as can see: cripples, mutilate in their own persons, do come out perfect in their generations. Brown.

MUTINE. n. f. [mutin, Fr.] A mutineer; a mover of insurrection. Not in use.

In my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep; methought I lay Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shakespeare.

Like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while. Shakespeare.

MUTINEER. n. f. [from mutin, Fr.] A mover of sedition; an opposer of lawful authority.

The war of the duke of Urbin, head of the Spanish mutineers, was unjust. Bacon.

Set wide the multi's garden-gate;
For there our mutineers appoint to meet. Dryden.

They have culled several of their followers as mutineers, who have contradicted them in political conversations. Addison.

MUTINOUS. adj. [mutiné, Fr.] Seditious; busy in insurrection; turbulent.

It tauntingly replied
To th' discontented members, th' mutinous parts,
That envied his receipt. Shakespeare.

The laws of England should be administered, and the mutinous severely suppressed. Hayward.

Lend me your guards, that if persuasion fail,
Force may against the mutinous prevail. Waller.

My ears are deaf with this impatient crowd;
Their wants are now grown mutinous and loud. Dryden.

MUTINOUSLY. adv. [from mutinous.]

Seditiously; turbulently.

A woman, a young woman, a fair woman, was to govern a people in nature mutinously proud, and always before used to hard governments. Sidney.

Men unprudently often, seditiously and mutinously sometimes, employ their zeal for persons. Spratt.

The spirit of my father begins to mutiny against this servitude. Shakespeare.

The people muting, the fort is mine,
And all the soldiers to my will incline. Waller.

When Caesar's army mutinied, and grew troublesome, no argument could appease them. South.

MUTINY. n. f. [from the verb.] Insurrection; sedition.

The king fled to a strong castle, where he was gathering forces to suppress this mutiny. Sidney.

M U T

I th' war,
Their insidies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spake not for them. Shakespeare.

In most strange postures We've seen him set himself. Shakespeare.

— I here's a mutiny in's mind. Shakespeare.

Less than if this frame
Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast earth. Milton.

Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who becomes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditions. Temp.

TO MUTTER. v. n. [mutire, mutare, Lat.] To grumble; to murmur.

What would you ask me, that I would deny,
Or stand to muttering on? Shakespeare.

How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter? Shakespeare.

Sky low'd, and muttering thunder some sad drops
Wept, at completing of the mortal sin Original! Milton.

They may trespass, and do as they please; no man dare accuse them, not so much as mutter against them. Burton.

Bold Brutons, at a brave bear-garden fray,
Are rous'd; and clatt'ring sticks cry, play, play,
play;
Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
And mutter to himself, ha, gens barbare!
And it is well he mutters, well for him;
Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.

When the tongue of a beautiful female was out out, it could not forbear muttering. Addison.

TO MUTTER. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.

Amongst the soldiers this is muttered;
That here you maintain several factions. Shaksp.

A kind of men, to loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutter their affairs. Shaksp.

Your lips have spoken lies, your tongues hath muttered perverseness. Shaksp.

A boteful prattling tongue,
That blows up jealousies, and heightens fears,
By muttering poisonous whispers in mens ears. Crook.

MUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Murmur; obscure utterance.

Without his rod rev'rend,
And backward mutters of dissembling power,
We cannot free the lady. Milton.

MUTTERER. n. f. [from mutter.] Grumbler; murmurer.

MUTTERINGLY. adv. [from muttering.]

With a low voice; without distinct articulation.

MUTTON. n. f. [mouton, Fr.]

1. The flesh of sheep dressed for food.

The flesh of roasted mutton or beef, falling on the birds will baste them. Swift's Direct. to the Cook.

2. A sheep. Now only in ludicrous language.

Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons. Shakespeare.

The flesh of muttons is better tasted where the sheep feed upon wild thyme and wholesome herbs. Bacon.

Within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.

MUTTONFIST. n. f. [mutton and fist.] A hand large and red.

Will he who saw the soldiers muttonfist,
And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list
To witness truth? Dryden.

MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, Fr. mutus, Lat.]

Reciprocally; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of music. Shakespeare.

What should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cases and pleasures are the same. Pope.

MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.

He never bore
Lake labour with the rest; where th' other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate. Shakespeare.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answered my affection. Shaksf.
The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write. Holder.

Pellucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in refracting, reflecting, and infecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton.
They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and fecundity. Atterbury.

May I the sacred pleasures know
Of strictest amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.

MUTUALITY. n. f. [from mutual.] Reciprocity.

Villanous thoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutualities to marshal the way, hand at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare.

MUZZLE. n. f. [muzeau, Fr.]

1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.

But ever and anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Clerke.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, for the fire with the tongue; if the tongue be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift's Rules to Serv.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.

The fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of refrant; and the wild dog Shall beth his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shaksf.

Greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;

With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound. Dryden.

TO MUZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.

The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.

TO MUZZLE. v. a.

1. To bind the mouth.

This butcher's cur is venom mouth'd, and I Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore beth Not wake him in his slumber. Shakespeare.

The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour. Dryden.

Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay.

2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.

The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child. L'Estrange.

3. To restrain from hurt.

My dagger muzzled
Lest it should hurt its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shakespeare.

MY. pronoun possessive. [See MINE.]

Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.

Her feet lie in my neck doth place. Spenser.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Bramhall.

If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection. Waller.

I shall present my reader with a journal. Addison.

MYNCHEN. n. f. [mynchen, Sax.] A nun.

MYOGRAPHY. n. f. [μυογραφία.] A description of the muscles.

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology. Chryse.

MYOPY. n. f. [μυωψία.] Shortness of sight.

MYRIAD. n. f. [μυριάς.]

1. The number of ten thousand.

2. Proverbially any great number.

Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton.
Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MYRMIDON. n. f. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the foldiers of Achilles.

The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curius, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYROBALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Latin.] A fruit.

The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preferred. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet an astringent. Bacon.

MYROPOLIST. n. f. [μυροπολίτης.] One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Lat. myrrhē, Fr.] A gum.

Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper-corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatic flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name. Hill's Materia Medica.

The myrrh sweet bleeding in the bitter wound.
I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Spenser.

MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Lat.] Made of the myrrhine stone.

How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imbols'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton.

MYRTIFORM. adj. [myrtus, Latin, and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.

MYRTLE. n. f. [myrtus, Lat. myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.

The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rosette; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make these beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As in the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakespeare.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacham.

Nor can the moist the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson.

MYSELF. n. f. [my and self.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it, that is, not I by proxy; not another.

As his host,
Who should against his murtherer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakespeare.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case. They have misfed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift.

3. I is sometimes omitted, to give force to the sentence.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. Addison.

MYSTAGOGUE. n. f. [μυσταγωγός; mystagogus, Lat.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers. Bailey.

MYSTERIARCH. n. f. [μυστήριος and ἀρχή.] One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTERIOUS. adj. [mystericus, Fr. from mysterium.]

1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

God at last
To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton.

Then the true Sun of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.

Those princes who were distinguished for mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift.

MYSTERIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]

1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.

Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor.

Each fair mysteriously was meant. Milton.

MYSTERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.

My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

TO MYSTERIZE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.

Mysterizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown.

MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; mystere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries, which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare.

Upon holy days let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add to the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us the great mystery of the Trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift.

M Y S

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shakespeare.
Important truths shall let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.
  3. A trade; a calling; in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from myster, French, a trade.
And that which is the noblest mystery,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Spenser.
Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shaksp.
- MYSTICAL. } adj. [mysticus, Lat.]
MYSTICK. }
1. Sacredly obscure.
Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor, concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker.
From salvation all flesh being excluded this way,
God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker.
  2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

M Y T

- To five other wand'ring fates! that move
In mystick dance, not without song, resound
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton.
- It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor.
It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet.
3. Obscure; secret.
Left new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate. Dryden.
- MYSTICALLY. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.
These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Donne.
- MYSTICALNESS. n. f. [from mystical.] Involution of some secret meaning.
- MYTHOLOGICAL. adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.
The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by

M Y T

- tradition step into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown.
- MYTHOLOGICALLY. adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.
- MYTHOLOGIST. n. f. [from mythology.] A relator or expositor of the ancient fables of the heathens.
The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Creech.
It was a celebrated problem among the ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris.
- TO MYTHOLOGIZE. v. n. [from mythology.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.
- MYTHOLOGY. n. f. [μῦθος and λογος; mythologic, Fr.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.
The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

N A I

- N Is a semivowel, and has in English an invariable sound: as, no, name, net; it is sometimes after m almost lost; as, condemn, contemn.
- TO NAB. v. a. [nappa, Swedish.] To catch unexpectedly; to seize without warning.
A word seldom used but in low language.
- NA'CKER, or NAKER. n. f. [concha margaritifera, Lat.] A shell that contained a pearl.
- NADIR. n. f. [Arabick.] The point under foot directly opposite the zenith.
As far as four bright signs comprise,
The distant zenith from the nadir lies. Creech.
- NAFF. n. f. [mergus cirrhatius.] A kind of tufted sea bird.
- NAG. n. f. [nagge, Dutch.]
1. A small horse. A horse in familiar language.
A hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horse-flesh; but the nag would be too fleet. L'Estrange.
Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive. Prior.
  2. A paramour: in contempt.
Your ribaud nag of Egypt
Huffs sails and dies. Shakespeare.
- NAIL. n. f. [nael, Sax. nagel, German.]
1. The hard crust or horny substance at the ends of the fingers and toes.
My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakespeare.
The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;
Expert in trusses. Dryden.
The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Key.
  2. The talons of birds; the claws or paws of beasts.

N A I

3. A spike of metal, by which things are fastened together.
As one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakespeare.
For the body of ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together. Bacon.
The load-stone mines in the shore of India are so placed in abundance and vigour, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown.
A beechen pail
Hung by the handle on a driven nail. Dryden.
An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.
  4. A stud; a boss.
For not the desk, with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.
  5. A measure of length; two inches and a quarter.
  6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I once supposed it from a counter fludded with nails, but have since found in an old record, solvere super ungum. It therefore means into the hand.
We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift.
- TO NAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with nails.
To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton.
He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unespy'd,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.
  2. To stud with nails.

N A K

- In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.
- NA'ILER. n. f. [from nail.] One whose trade is to forge nails; a nail-maker.
- NA'KED. adj. [nacob, Saxon.]
1. Wanting clothes; uncovered; bare.
A philosopher being asked, in what a wife man differed from a fool? answered, sent them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive. Bacon.
He pitying how they stood Before him naked to the air, that now
Must suffer change;
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton.
  2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.
Hud I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare.
Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.
  3. Plain; evident; not hidden.
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakespeare.
  4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.
Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, having only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker.
- NA'KEDLY. adv.
1. Without covering.
  2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.
Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that pro-

N A M

party in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in
1. Holder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.

So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wife
Thas overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest-sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they die. Daniel.

NA'KENNESS. n. f. [from naked.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with profetted nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shakspeare.
Nor lie their outward only, with the skins
Of beards, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Araying, cover'd from his Father's sight. Milton.
I entreat my gentle readers to tow on their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocency of their mother Eve. Addison.
Thou to be strong must put off every dreis,
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.

Spies, to see the nakedness of the land are ye come. Genius.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.

Why seek'st thou to cover with excus
That which appears in proper nakedness? Shakspeare.
NALL. n. f. An awl, such as collar-makers or shoemakers use.

Whole bridle and saddle, whiteleather and nall,
With collars and harness. Tuffin.

NAME. n. f. [nama, Sax. naem, Dutch.]

1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.

What is thy name?
—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
—No: though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

—My name's Macbeth. Shakspeare
He called their names after the names his father had called them. Genius.

Thousands there were in darker fame that dwell,
Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

2. The term by which any kind or species is distinguished.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet. Shakspeare.
If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless. Locke.

3. Person.

They hit with women each degen'rate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden.

4. Reputation; character.

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind. Chaucer.

5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.

What men of name is lost to him?
Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
And Race ap Thomas with a valiant crew,
And many others of great name and worth. Shakspeare.
Visit eminent persons of great name abroad; to tell how the life agreeth with the fame. Bacon.

Here rest thy bones in rich Hesperia's plains,
Thy name, 'tis all a ghost can have, remains. Dryden.
A hundred knights
Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name. Dryden.
These shall be towns of mighty fame.
Tho' now they lie obscure, and lands without a name. Dryden.

But Julius of great name; whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers as Papinias's was among the ancients. Baker.

6. Power delegated; imputed character.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him. Shakspeare.

7. Fictitious imputation.

When Ulysses with fallacious arts,
Hear'd org'd a treason in my patron's name,
My kinsman fell. Dryden.

8. Appearance; not reality; assumed character.

I'll to him again, in the name of Brook:
He'll tell me all his purpose. Shakspeare.

There is a friend which is only a friend in name. Eccelesiasticus.

9. An opprobrious appellation.

The husband
Bids her confess; calls her ten thousand names;
In vain the kneels. Granville.

Like the watermen of Thames
I row by, and call them names. Swift.

To NAME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To discriminate by a particular appellation imposed.

I mention here a son of the king's whom Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed to pace
To speak of Perdita. Shakspeare.
Thou hast had seven husbands, neither wast thou named after any of them. Tobit.
His name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived. Luke.

Thus was the building left Ridiculous, and the work, Confusion nam'd. Milton.

2. To mention by name.

Accuse not thy mouth to swearing: neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One. Ecclus.
My tongue could name what'er I saw. Milton.
Those whom the fables name of monstrous size.
Milton.

3. To specify; to nominate.

Did my father's gossion seek your life?
He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar. Shakspeare.
Bring me him up whom I shall name. 1 Samuel.
Let any one name that proposition, whose terms or ideas were either of them unite. Locke.

4. To utter; to mention.

Let my name be named on them. Genius.

5. To entitle.

Celestial, whether among the thrones, or nam'd
Of them the highest. Milton.

NAMELESS. adj. [from name.]

1. Not distinguished by any discriminative appellation.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.

The milky way,
Form'd of many nameless stars. Waller.

Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.

2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.

A little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens. Atterbury.

Such ming'ry of greatness all became
A nameless dwelling, and an unknown name. Harte.

NAMELESS. adv. [from name.] Particularly;
specially; to mention by name.

It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the same which diligent beholders of her works have observed; namely, that she provideth for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice. Hooker.

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
To none of these, except he be the last;
Namely, some love that drew him out from home. Shakspeare.

The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very suspicious manner to do the deed, advised her to go less abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody. Bacon.

For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question. Addison.

Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us; namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method for gaining long life, riches, and reputation. Addison.

NAME. n. f. [from name.] One who calls or knows any by name.

NAME-SAKE. n. f. One that has the same name with another.

N A M

N A P

Nor does the dog-fish at sea, much more make out the dog of land, than that his cognominal, or name-fake in the heavens. Brown.

One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes: they can indeed see the light, as is said of their name-fakes; but immediately shut their eyes. Addison.

NAP. n. f. [hnæppan, Sax. to sleep.]

1. Slumber; a short sleep. A word ludicrously used.

Mopsa sat swallowing of sleep with open mouth, making such a noise, as no body could lay the stealing of a nap to her charge. Sidney.
Let your bounty take a nap, and I will awake it anon. Shakspeare.

The sun had long since in the lap
Of Thetis, taken out his nap. Hudibras.

So long as I'm at the forge you are still taking your nap. L'Estrange.

2. [hnoppa, Saxon.] Down; villous substance.

Amongst those leaves she made a butterfly
With excellent device and wondrous flight;
The velvet nap, which on his wings doth lie,
Thou filken down with which his back is dight. Spenser.
Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and fit a new nap upon it. Shakspeare.

Plants, though they have no pickles, have a kind of downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; which down or nap cometh of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance. Bacon.

Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade;
His only coat! where dust contriv'd with rain
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift.

To NAP. v. a. [hnæppan, Saxon.] To sleep; to be drowsy or secure; to be superinely careless.

They took him napping in his bed. Hudibras.
A wolf took a dog napping at his master's door. L'Estrange.

What is seriously related by Helmont, that four hundred, slept in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days time turn the wheat into mice without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some landowner, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were then taken napping just when they had made an end of their good cheer. Bentley.

NAP-TAKING. n. f. [nap and take.] Surprise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.

Naptakings, assaults, spoilings, and firings, have in our forefathers days, between us and France been common. Carew.

NAPE. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology
Skinner imagines it to come from nap the hair that grows on it; Junius, with his usual Greek sagacity, from νάπη, a hill; perhaps from the same root with knob.] The joint of the neck behind.

Turn your eyes towards the napes of your neck;
and make but an interior survey of your good felves. Shakspeare.

Donatien dreamed, the night before he was that that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck. Bacon.

Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineal fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown
it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp an-unpleasant taste, and of a brisk and penetratin smell, of the bituminous kind. It is extremel ready to take fire. Hill.

Strabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen
It swims on the top of the water of wells an springs. That fount about Babykua is in founsprings whitish, tho' it be generally black, and chfers little from petroleum. Woodward.

12. Phyticks; the science which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night, God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

13. Of this word which occurs so frequently, with significations so various, and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomized.

Nature sometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans, as, nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whose account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature, at its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, as when we say, a man is made by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be expressed by saying, the man was born so; or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature; for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things; as, nature makes the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order, or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one; as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or nature left to herself will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God; as there is no phynix or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use the word, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of mundanity. In this sense it is best not to use it at all. Boyle's Free Enquiry.

NATIVITY. n. f. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. Not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that into the first cause, which we impute out on the second; or that we deny unto nature we impute unto mundanity. Brown.

4. Close; not running; observant of style or manner of the thing copied.

Bacon's Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most famous of any in allusion of the Amend. Yet though he takes the advantages of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.

5. Closely related.

If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him. Leitner.

6. Intimate; familiar; admitted to confidence.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

7. Touching; pressing; affecting; dear.

Every minute of his being thrills
Against my nearest of life. Shakespeare.

He could never judge that it was better to be deceived than not, in a matter of so great and near concernment. Locke.

8. Parsimonious; inclining to covetousness:
as, a near man.

NEAR HAND. Closely; without acting or waiting at a distance.

The entering near hand into the manner of performance of that which is under deliberation, hath overturned the opinion of the possibility or impossibility. Bacon's Holy War.

NEARLY. adv. [from near.]

1. At no great distance; not remotely.

Many are the enemies of the priesthood; they are diligent to observe whatever may nearly or remotely blemish it. Atterbury.

2. Closely; pressing.

Nearly it now concerns us, to be sure
Of our omnipotence. Milton.

It concerneth them nearly, to preserve that government which they had trusted with their money. Swift.

3. In a niggardly manner.

NEARNESS. n. f. [from near.]

1. Closeness; not remoteness; approach.

God, by reason of his nearness, forbade them to be like the Canaanites or Egyptians. Hobbes.

Delicate sculptures be helped with nearness, and gross with distance; which was well seen in the controversy between Phidias and Alcamenes about the statue of Venus. Hobbes.

Those blessed spirits that are in such a nearness to God, may well be all love and love, but you at such a distance cannot find the effects of it. Duppa.

The best rule is to be guided by the nearness, or distance at which the repetitions are placed in the original. Pope.

2. Alliance of blood or affection.

Whether there be any secret passages of sympathy between persons of near blood, as, parents, children, brothers and sisters. There be many reports in history, that upon the death of persons of such nearness, men have had an inward feeling of it. Bacon.

3. Tendency to avarice; caution of expense.

It shews in the king a nearness, but yet with a kind of justness. So these little grains of gold and silver helped not a little to make up the great heap. Bacon's Henry vii.

NEAT. n. f. [neat, nyzen, Saxon; nauf, Islandick and Scottish.]

1. Black-rattle; oxen. It is commonly used collectively.

The steer, the heifer, and the calf,
Are all called neat. Shakespeare.

Smoke pricketh flesh; as we see in bacon,
neats tongues, and marmosins here. Bacon.

His droves of asses, camels, heids of neat,
And flocks of sheep, grew shortly twice as great. Sundys.

What care of neat, or sheep is to be had,
I sing, Meenas. Mary's Virgil.

Some kick'd until they can feel, whether
A shoe be Spanish or neat leather. Hudibras.

As great a drover, and as great
A crick to, in his own neat. Hudibras.

Set it in rich mould, with neats dung and lime. Mortimer.

2. A single cow or ox.

Who both by his own and his lamb will be known,
May well kill a neat and a sheep of his own. Tuff.

Go and get me some neat's foot. —
What say you to me it's foot? —

'Tis passing good, I pray you, let me have it. Shak.

NEAT. adj. [neat, French; neat, Latin.]

1. Elegant, but without dignity.

The thoughtless, the gay, the careless, the perfect, and perfect, the perfect, the perfect, yet as pure as the famours soft adorned, neat, and neat flour, easy, and yet lively. Pope.

2. Cleanly.

Heads and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phidias dresses. Milton.

If you were to see her, you would wonder what poor body it was, that was so surprisingly neat and clean. Law.

3. Pure; unadulterated; unmingled: now used only in the cant of trade, but formerly more extensive.

Tuns of sweet old wines, along the wall;
Neat and crumpe drink. Chapman's Odyssey.

When the best of Greece besides, more ever, at our cheer,

My good old ardent wine, with small; and our interior mutes

Drinke even that mist wine measured two; thou drinkst without those crates

Our old wine, neat. Chapman.

How the nebb holds up the bill to him,
And smite her with the boldness of a wife. Shakespeare.
Take a nebb with a belly and a long nebb. Bacon.

2. [In Scotland.] The bill of a bird. See NIN.

NEBULA. n. f. [Lat.] It is applied to appearances, like a cloud in the human body; as also to films upon the eyes.

NEBULOUS. adj. [nebulus, Lat.] Misty; cloudy.

NECESSARIES. n. f. [from necessary.]
Things not only convenient but needful; things not to be left out of daily life.

The superfluous necessaries are, the preventing, assisting, and renewing grace of God, which we suppose God ready to annex to the revelation of his will, in the hearts of all that with obedient humble spirits receive and sincerely embrace it. Hammond.

We are to ask of God such necessaries of life as are needful to us, while we live here. Duty of Man.

The right of man has to be maintained and provided with the necessaries and conveniences of life, out of his father's substance, him a right to succeed to his father's property, for his own good. Locke.

NECESSARILY. adv. [from necessary.]
1. Indispensably.

I would know by some special instance, what one article of christian faith, or what duty required necessarily unto all men's salvation there is, which the very reading of the word of God is not apt to natify. Hooker.

Every thing is endowed with such a natural principle, whereby it is necessarily inclined to promote its own preservation, and well being. Wolton.

2. By inevitable consequence.

They who reject the church unto that which was at the first, must necessarily set bounds and limits unto their speeches. Hooker.

3. By fate; not freely.

The church is not of such a nature as would necessarily, once begun, preferve itself forever. Pearson.

They subjected God to the fatal chain of causes, whereas they should have resolved the necessity of all inferior events into the free determination of God himself, who executes necessarily, that which he first propoed freely. South.

NECESSARINESS. n. f. [from necessary.]
The state of being necessary.

NECESSARY. adj. [necessarius, Lat.]

1. Needful; indispensably requisite.

Being it is impossible we should have the same sanctity which is in God, it will be necessary to declare what is holiness which maketh men be accounted holy ones, and called sancti. Peckham.

All creatures are in a necessity of understanding; 'Tis only necessary to be good. Dryden.

A certain kind of temper is necessary to the pleasure and quiet of our minds, consequently to our happiness, and that is holiness and goodness. Tit.

The Dutch would go on to challenge the military government and the revenues, and reckon them among what shall be thought necessary for their barrier. Swift.

2. Not free; fatal; impelled by fate.
I wish, a necessary end.
Will come when it will come. Shakespeare.

3. Conclusive; decisive by inevitable consequence.

They resolve us not, what they understand by the commandment of the word; whether a literal and formal commandment, or a commandment inferred by any necessary inference. White.

No man can show by any necessary argument, that it is naturally impossible that all the relations concerning America should be false. Talbot.

TO NECESSITATE. v. a. [from necessitas, Lat.] To make necessary; not to leave free; to exempt from choice.

Halt thou proudly asserted the good thou hast done to thy own strength, or imputed thy fins and follies to the necessitating and inevitable decrees of God. Deppa's Rules for Devotion.

The marquis of Newcastle being pressed on both sides, was necessitated to draw all his army into York. Clarendon.

Man seduc'd,
And fatter'd out of all, believing dies
Against his Maker; no deceit in mine
Concuring to necessitate his fall. Milton.

Our voluntary vice he requires,
Not our necessitated. Milton.

Neither the Divine Providence, or his demonstrations, persuasions, or infusions of the understanding, or will of rational creatures doth deceive the understanding, or pervert the will, or necessitate or incline either to any moral evil. Hale.

The politician never thought that he would fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court. South.

The Eternal, when he did the world create
And other agents did necessitate;
So what he order'd they by nature do;
Thus light things mount, and heavy downward go,
Man only boasts an arbitrary state. Dryden.

The perfections of any person may create our veneration; his power, our fear; and his authority ruling them, a servile and necessitated obedience; but love can be produced only by kindness. Bogers.

NECESSITATION. n. f. [from necessitate.]
The act of making necessary; fatal compulsion.

This necessitation, grounded upon the necessitation of a man's will without his will, is to far from relieving those difficulties which flow from the fatal destiny of the Stoicks, that it enrich them. Brantfort against Hobbes.

Where the law makes a certain law, there is a necessitation to one; where the law doth not make a certain law, there is no necessitation to one, and there they have power in liberty to choose. Brantfort against Hobbes.

NECESSITATED. adj. [from necessitate.] In a state of want. Not used.

This was a scene, and when I gave it Helen,
I had her, if her fortune ever stood Necessitated to sleep, that by this token
I would relieve her. Shakespeare.

NECESSITATED. adj. [from necessitate.] Predestined with poverty.

They who were exiled, found no satisfaction in what they were exiled for, being poor and necessitated. Charnock.

In legal disputes, and righting himself, or those who, though not perfectly necessitated, are yet very necessitated, a good man will not be hasty in going to extremities. Heathcote.

There are multitudes of necessitated persons and penurious parents, persons in pinching circumstances, with numerous families of children. Arbuthnot.

NECESSITATEDNESS. n. f. [from necessitated.]
Poverty; want; need.

Universal peace is demonstration of universal plenty, for where there is want and necessitatedness, there will be a quarrelling. Barnet.

NECESSITUDE. n. f. [from necessitudo, Lat.]

1. Want; need.

The mutual necessitudes of human nature necessarily maintain mutual offices between them. Hale.

2. Friendship.

NECESSITY. n. f. [necessitas, Lat.]

1. Cogency; compulsion; fatality.

Necessity and chance Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.

Though there be no natural necessity, that such things must be so, and that they cannot possibly be otherwise, without implying a contradiction; yet may they be so certain as not to admit of any reasonable doubt concerning them. Wilkins.

2. State of being necessary; indispensable.

Urges the necessity, and state of times. Shakespeare.

Racine used the chorus to his father, but not that he found any necessity of it: it was only to give the ladies an occasion of entertaining the king with vocal music. Dryden.

We see the necessity of an augmentation, to bring the enemy to reason. Addison.

3. Want; need; poverty.

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakespeare.

The cause of all the distinctions in his court or army, proceeded from the extreme poverty, and necessity his majesty was in. Clarendon.

We are first to consult our own necessities, but then the necessities of our neighbours have a christian right to a part of what we have to spare. L'Estrange.

4. Things necessary for human life.

These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us
To waste these times. Shakespeare.

Great part of the world are free from the necessities of labour and employment, and have their time and fortunes in their own disposal. Law.

5. Cogency of argument; inevitable consequence.

There never was a man of solid understanding, whole apprehensions are looser, and by a penitive inspection advised, but that he hath found by an irreducible necessity, one true God and everlasting being. Raleigh.

Good-nature or beneficence and candour, is the product of right reason; which of necessity will give allowance to the feelings of others. Dryden.

6. Violence; compulsion.

Never shall
Our heads get out; it once within we be,
But stay compell'd by strong necessity. Chapman.

NECK. n. f. [hincra, Sax. neck, Dutch.]

1. The part between the head and body.

He'll beat Auldius' head below his knee,
And tread upon his neck. Shakespeare.

The length of the face twice exceedeth that of the neck. Bacon.

She clapp'd her leathern wing against your tower's,
And thrust out her long neck even to your doors. Dryden.

I look on the tacker to be the ornament and defence of the female neck. Addison.

2. A long narrow part.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land, between the sea on the one part, and the harbour on the other. Bacon.

Thou walk'st as on a narrow mountain's neck,
A precarious height, with scanty room to tread. Druid.

3. On the Neck; immediately after; from one following another closely.

He depos'd the king,
And, on the neck of that, talk'd the whole state. Shakespeare.

The second way to aggregate sin, is by addition of sin to sin, and that is done sundry ways; first by committing one sin on the neck of another; as David did when he added murder to adultery. Ferkins.

Instantly on the neck of this came news, that Ferdinand and Isabella had concluded a peace. Bacon.

4. To break the neck of an affair; to hinder any thing being done; or, to do more than half.

2. Enchantment; conjuration.

He did it partly by necromancy, wherein he was much skilled.

This palace standeth in the air,
By necromancy placed there,
That it no tempest needs to fear.

NECTAR. n. f. [Latin.] Pleasant liquor, said to be drunk by the heathen deities.

NECTAREAN. adj. [from nectar.] Tinged with nectar; mingled with nectar; abounding with nectar.

He gave her to his daughters to imbibe
In nectarean cups, with a phœbeal.

How charming is divine poison!—
Not hush'd and hush'd, as dull fools suppose,
But undiminish'd, as Apollo's love,

And a perpetual feast of nectarean sweets,
Where nectar's rude surfeit reigns.

He with the Nais would dwell,
Leaving the nectarean joys of Jove.

NECTAREOUS. adj. [nectareus, Lat.] Resplending nectar; sweet as nectar.

Amidst the grape, the rose renew,
The nectareous and the nectareous dew.

tween ascendants and defendants, and between collaterals, as far as the divine prohibition extends. Ayl.

NEGATION, n. f. [negatio, Lat. negatio,
Fr.]

1. Denial: the contrary to affirmation.
Our assertions and negations should be yes and nay, for whatsoever is more than these is sin. Rogers.

2. Description by denial, or exclusion, or exception.
Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be prefixed with it; as when we say a stone is mani-mate, or blind, or deaf. Hotta's Logick.

Chance signifies, that all events called casual, as among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, with that only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations. Bentley.

3. Argument drawn from denial.
It may be proved in the way of negation, that they came not from Europe, as having no remainder of the arts, learning and civilities of it. Heglyn.

NEGATIVE, adj. [negativus, Fr. negativus, Latin.]

a. Denying: contrary to affirmative.

2. Implying only the absence of something;
not positive; privative.

There is another way of denying Christ with our mouths which is negativus, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South.

Consider the necessary connection that is between the negation and positive part of our duty. Tillot.

3. Having the power to withhold, though not to compel.
Denying me any power of a negative voice as I am, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. King Charles.

NEGATIVE, n. f.
1. A proposition by which something is denied.
Of negatives we have for the least certainty;
they are usually harsh, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillot.

2. A particle of denial: as, not.
A power sublimely is denied;
But by a heap of negatives is bound;
Ask what a spirit is, and hear them cry,
It hath no matter, no mortality. Cleveland.

NEGATIVELY, adv. [from negative.]
1. With denial; in the form of denial; not affirmatively.
When I take him whether he had not drunk at all, he answered negatively. Baile.

2. In form or speech implying the absence of something.
The fathers draw arguments from the Scriptures negatively, in proof of that which is evil. Scriptures teach us not, avoid it therefore. H. A.

To that I should get forth by way of answer,
both negatively and positively. Wilkins.

I shall show what the image of God in man is,
negatively, by showing wherein it does not consist and positively, by showing wherein it does. South.

TO NEGLECT, v. a. [neglectus, Lat.]

1. To omit by carelessness.
Heaven,
Where honour due and reverence none neglects. Mt.

2. To treat with scornful heedlessness.
If he neglect to hear the music, it into the church
it shall. South.

This my long full rip and my day of grace,
Thou who neglect and idleness shall never take. Ant.

3. To postpone.
I have been long a sleeper; but I trust
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Shakespeare.

NEGLECT, n. f. [neglectus, Lat.]

1. Inattention.
2. Careless treatment; scornful inattention.
I have perceived a most faint neglect of late,
which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very presence or pursuit of unkindness. Shakespeare.

3. Negligence; frequency of neglect.
Age breeds neglect in all, and actions
Remote in time, like objects remote in place,
Are not beheld at half their greatness. Denham.

4. State of being unregarded.
Rescue my poor remembrance from vile neglect,
With virgin honours let my heart be deck'd,
And decent emblem. Prior.

NEGLECTER, n. f. [from neglect.] One who neglects.

NEGLECTFUL, adj. [neglect and full.]
1. Heedless; careless; inattentive; with of.
Moral ideas not offering themselves to the senses,
but being to be framed to the understanding, people are neglectful of a faculty they are apt to think wants nothing. Locke.

Though the Romans had not great genius for trade, yet they were not entirely neglectful of it.
Arbutnot.

2. Treating with indifference.
If the father cares them when they do well, show a cold and neglectful countenance to them upon doing ill, it will make them sensible of the difference. Locke.

NEGLECTFULLY, adv. [from neglectful.]
With heedless inattention; with careless indifference. Not used.

NEGLECTION, n. f. [from neglect.] The state of being negligent.

Sleeping neglection doth betray to loss
The conquests of our scarce cold conqueror. Shakspeare.

NEGLECTIVE, adj. [from neglect.] Inattentive to; regardless of.
I wanted not probabilities sufficient to raise jealousies in any king's heart, not wholly stupid, and neglective of the publick peace. King Charles.

NEGLECTIGENCE, n. f. [negligence, Fr. ne-gligencia, Lat.]

1. Habit of omitting by heedlessness, or of acting carelessly.
2. Instance of neglect.
She let it drop by negligence,
And, to the advantage, I being here, took't up. Shakspeare.

NEGLECTIVE, adj. [negligent, Fr. negligent,
Latin.]

1. Careless; heedless; habitually inattentive.
My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him. 2 Chronicles.

2. Careless of any particular; with of before a noun.
Her daughters see her great zeal for religion;
but then they see an equal earnestness for all sorts of mercy. They see the is not negligent of her demeanor; but then they see her more careful to praise her complexion. Law.

We have been negligent in not hearing his voice.
Baruch.

3. Scornfully regardless.
Let it be a pride puff is three long,
And be thou negligent of time;
With every one to go to the long,
Let it be a pride puff is three long. Swift.

NEGLECTIVELY, adv. [from negligent.]
1. Carelessly; heedlessly; without exact-ness.
There is a voluntary motion and therefore inima-gination, and it is one of the ancients have said that the imagination is indeterminate, and their imagination indeterminate, it is neglective, observed; for it is so in it for void to their minds, and hees know the way to the other. Bacon.

Of a four elder plays,
This and Philaster have the same name;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame.
In both our long the genius is expert,
Lusty and bold, but neglective by itself. Waller.

He is my figure and my jewels store,
Or negligent of place for thee alone. Prior.

TO NEGOTIATE, v. n. [negociar, Fr. from negotium, Lat.] To have intercourse of business; to traffick; to treat: whether of publick affairs, or private matters.

Have you any communion from your lord to negotiate with my face? Shakspeare.

She was a busy negotiating woman, and in her withdrawing chamber had the fortunate conspiracy for the king against king Richard been hatched.
Bacon.

It is a common error in negotiating; whereas men have many reasons to persuade, they strive to use them all at once, which weakeneth them. Bacon.

They that receive the talents to negotiate with,
did all of them except one make profit of them.
Hanmond.

A reward to embattle those goods he undertakes to manage; an ambassador to betray his prince for whom he should negotiate; are crimes that double their malignity from the quality of the actors.
Decay of Piety.

I can discover none of these intercourses and negotiations, unless that Luther negotiated with a black bear. Atterbury.

NEGOTIATION, n. f. [negociation, Fr. from negotiate.] Treaty of business, whether publick or private.

Oil is slow, smooth, and solid; so are Spaniards observed to be in their motion: Though it be a question yet unresolved, whether their affected gravity and slowness in their negotiations have tended more to their prejudice or advantage. Howard.

They ceased not from all worldly labour and negotiation. White.

NEGOTIATOR. n. f. [negociateur, Fr. from negotiate.] One employed to treat with others.

Those who have defended the proceedings of our negotiators at Gertruydenburg, dwell much upon their zeal in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands, but say nothing to justify those demands. Swift.

NEGRO. n. f. [Spanish; negre, Fr.] A blackmoor.

Negroes transplanted into cold and stegmatic habitations, continue their hue in themselves and their generations. Brown.

NIE. n. f. [nif, Islandick; neef, Scottish.] Fill. It is likewise written neaf.

Sweet knight, I kiss thy wet. Shakespeare.

To NEIGH. v. n. [hazgan, Sax. negn, Dutch.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetting mud bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakespeare.

They were as fed horses, every one neigh'd. Jeremiah.

Run up the ridges of the rocks again;
And with shrill neighings fill the neighbouring plain. Dryden.

The generous horse, that nobly wild,
Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.

NEIGH. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of a horse.

It is the pounce of palefrees; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforce homage. Shakespeare.

NEIGHBOUR. n. f. [negebur, Sax.]

1. One who lives near to another.

He sent such an addition of foot, as he could draw out of Oxford, and the neighb. using garritious. Clarendon.

A kid sometimes for festivals he flew,
The choicer part was his sick neighbour's due. Harte.

2. One who lives in familiarity with another; a word of civility.

Masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours, Will you undo yourselves? Shakespeare.

3. Any thing next or near.

This man that set me packing;
Till ing the guts into the neighbour room. Shakespeare.

4. Intimate; confidant.

The deep revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakespeare.

5. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.

Sins against men are injuries; hurts, losses, and damages, whereby our neighbour is in his dignity, life, chastity, wealth, good name, or any way justly offended, or by us hindered. Locke.

The gospel allows no such term as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Sprout.

You should always change and alter your interests, according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance seem to require. Law.

To NEIGHBOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjoin to; to confine on.

Wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of sower quality. Shakespeare.

Give me thy hand,
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. Shakespeare.

They grow on the leisurely ascending hills that neighbour the shore. Sandys.

Things much equivalent and neighbouring value,
By lot are parted. Prior.

2. To acquaint with; to make near to.

That being off so young days brought up with him,
And since so neighbour'd to his youth and favour. Shakespeare.

NEIGHBOURHOOD. n. f. [from neighbour.]

One in the neighbourhood mortally sick of the small-pox, desiring the doctor to come to him. Fell.

I could not bear
To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,
But flew in all the haste of love to find thee. Addis.

2. State of being near each other.

Consider several states in a neighbourhood; in order to preserve peace between their states, it is necessary they should be formed into a balance. Swift.

3. Those that live within reach of communication.

How ill mean neighbourhood your genius suits?
To live like Adam midst an herd of brutes! Harris.

NEIGHBOURLY. adj. [from neighbour.]

Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.

The Scottish lord hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and twice he would pay when he was able. Shakespeare.

The Woodberry so high, and neighbourly doth live,
With Abberley his friend. Drayton.

He steals my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge if this be neighbourly dealing. Acworth.

NEIGHBOURLY. adv. [from neighbour.]

With social civility.

NEITHER. conjunct. [napðer, Sax. ne either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor.

Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. King.

Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign merchandize, nor inquisitive after the lives and fortunes of their neighbours. Heylyn.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it. Gracius.

This commandment standeth not for a cypher, neither is it read and expounded in vain among Christians. White.

3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and though not very grammatically, yet emphatically, after another negative; in old English two negatives denied.

It is thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard, we see that lightning and conflagrations, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither. Locke.

NEITHER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare.

Which of them shall I take?
Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd. Shakespeare.

If both remain alive

The balance, by a propensity to either side, inclined to neither. Fell.

Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him; Thus I abhor myself, and excuse him,
Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Dryden.

Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother; but independent of each other. Locke.

NE'NUPHAR. n. f. [nymphæa, Lat.] Water lily, or water rose.

NE'OPHYTE. n. f. [neophyte, Fr. new and phos.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEP. n. f. [ncpeta, Lat.] An herb.

NEPENTHE. n. f. [η and πενθε.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport
Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a court;
There were no fathers, brothers, friends disagree,
Once break their rest, nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NEPHEW. n. f. [nepos, Lat. neveu, Fr.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.

Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.

I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandfathers by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.

With what intent they were published, those words of the nephew of Jesus daughter by right, after that my grandfather's sins had given himself to the receiving of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and hath gotten therein sufficient judgment, he proposed also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom. Hooker.

Her heart at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And to his hatching nephew smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thence eleven descents the crown retain'd. Spenser.

NEPHRETIC. adj. [nephretic, nephre-tique, Fr.]

The diet of nephretic persons ought to be opposite to the alkalescent nature of the salts in their blood. Arbutnot.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephretic stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green; but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodward.

NEPOTISM. n. f. [nepotisme, Fr. nepos, Lat.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendor, for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison.

NERVE. n. f. [nervus, Lat. nerf, Fr.]

1. The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body, they have also blood vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever my nerve tends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglion or plexus. Quincy.

What man dares, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my own nerves Shall never tremble. Shakespeare.

2. It is used by the poets for new or gender.

If equal power

Thou would'st intume, smite my nerves, as then
I could encounter with thee hundred men. Chapm.

Strong tharysden did hang a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and at the nerves in two. Pope.

NE'VELESS. adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Hail not her sister Sairee had her bed. Daniel.

NE'VOUS. adj. [nervous, Lat.]

1. Well strung; strong; vigorous.

NES

What nest us arises he boasts, how firm his tread;
His hands his feet, his eyes, his ears, his head;
2. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

The vocal tract, murmuring from afar,
Whisper'd no place to echo the murmurous war,
And I believe, the firm of the plan,
Sung by the muses in vain. Hate.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or dilated nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Chayne.
Nervy. adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

Deaf, that did not, in his merry arm doth lie,
Which being advanced, declines, and then men die.
Shakespeare

NE'SCIENCE. n. f. [from nescio, Lat.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have relapsed their knowledge into Socrates his bun-total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed ne'science. Gloucester

NESH. adj. [nepe, Sax.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Skinner.

NESS.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality: as, poissinous, poissinousness;
turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness;
from nipe, Sax.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nepe, Sax. a nose of land, or headland.

NEST. n. f. [nepe, Sax.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for inculation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young.
Deuteronomy.

Th' example of the heav'nly Jark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark,
Above the skies let thy proud music found,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley

2. Any place where animals are produced.
Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shaksp.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or repositories.

To NEST. v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves. Houel

NEST'EGG. n. f. [nest and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for show,
Like nest'eggs, to make clients lay. Hudibras.

To NESTLE. v. n. [from nest.] To settle;
to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle 'till succours came. Bacon.

A cock got into the stable was nestling in the straw among the horses. L'Estrange.

The kingfisher woots commonly by the waterside, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

NET

Flattering there they nestle near the throne,
And lounge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the snails nestle all the winter. Addison.

Mark where the fly directory creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh,
The monsters nestle in the deep.

To freeze you in your paining by. Sayf.

To NETTLE. v. a.

1. To trouble, as in a nest.

Poor heart!
That labour'st yet to nestle thee,
Thou thank'st by loving here to get a party,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Daniel.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestled in his little head. Prior

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This flower, so lovely and so sweet,
To this Minerva, that her hands ever in his deeds,
She, like his mother, nestles him. Chapman

NESTLING. n. f. [from nistle.] A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET. n. f. [nati, Gothick; net, Sax.]

1. A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor line,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakespeare.

Impatience entangle's us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble.
Thoulo.

2. Any thing made with interstitial vacu-ities.

He made nets of chequered work for the clumpers, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings.

The vegetative tubes,
Wrept in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thompson.

NETHER. adj. [neoden, Saxon; neder, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we say the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems compounded in the word
beneath. Nether is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Deuteronomy.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly, they draw with a full and nether great lip. Pracham.

This odious off-spring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with tear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd. Milton.

The upper part whereof was whey,
The nether, orange mix'd with grey. Hudibras.

A beautiful mind above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts. Rost.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall
Should gape in nether, and rushing down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first fulsome in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shows you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakespeare.

Numberless were those bad angels, seen
Hov'ring on wing under the cope of hell,
Twixt upper, nether, and farrounding fires. Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n. Milton.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden.

NETHERMOST. adj. [superl. of nether.]

Lowest.

NEV

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell. Psalms.

Undanted to meet there whatever pow'r,

Or spirit, of the nethermost abyss

Might in that noise reside. Milton.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself could be too good for him. South.

Heraclitus tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost. Keil against Burnet.

NETTING. n. f. A reticulated piece of work.

NETTLE. n. f. [nezel, Sax.] A stinging herb well known.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle. Shal
Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That a none for them can, when they perish, grieve. Waller.

To NETTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate; to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estr.

Although at every part of the apoplexy discomposed of them might be miserably and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was full observed.
Beattie.

NETWORK. n. f. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

No any shall'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fine ring fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the inciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful network of veins, must be transported with admiration. Blackmore.

NEVER. adv. [ne ever, naefne, Sax. ne aype, not ever.]

1. At no time.

Never, alas, the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.

Never any thing was so unbr'd as that odious
man. Concetto

By its own force destroy'd, fruition caus'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

Death still draws nearer, never seeming near. Pope

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think with justice, of solecism:
as, he is mistaken though never so wise.
It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections be so to be abandoned, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hudibras.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Genius

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affections of any one part of the body instantly make a transmigration throughout the whole body. Bacon.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Kneller.

Death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees. Duty of Man.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so close a light; and never so near him.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second.

3. In no degree.

Whoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

God hath not then left this to chuse that, neither would reject that to chuse this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,

Forchisting up aloft his speckled breast,

And often bounding on the bruised grass,

As for great joyance of his new-come guest.

Your master's lines

Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break

As easily as I do tear this paper.

Will you with those infinites the ows,

Unfriend'd, new-adopted to our hate,

Dow'r'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

Take her or leave her?

Left by a multitude

The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out.

Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,

And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,

Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

He saw heav'n blossom with a new born light,

On which, as on a glorious stranger gas'd

The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright

The way to Bethl'hem, and as boldly blaz'd;

Nor ask'd to leave it the sun, by day as night.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray

Hover o'er the new born day;

With rosy wings to richly bright,

As it had seem'd to think of night,

When a ruddy storm, whose scowl

Made heaven's radiant face look foul,

Call'd for an untimely night

To blot the newly blossom'd light.

Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together

fow'd,

And girded on our loins, may cover round

Thole middle parts, that this new-runner shame,

There sit not, and reproach us as unclean.

Their father's state,

And new-entrusted sceptre.

The new-creat'd world, which fame in heav'n

Long had told.

Thou wast, and from thence createst more good,

Witness this new-made world, another heav'n.

All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair

As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter

hair,

All in that new-blown age which does inspire

Warmth in their lives, and in their holders fire.

It could, yet that it should always run them out such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashion'd one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined.

This English edition is not to properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-wounded.

New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery.

Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,

Or Ulysses' counsel, her new-chosen mate.

Shewn all at once you dazzled to our eyes,

As new-born Pallas did the gods for prize.

When springing forth from Jove's new-closing wound,

She struck the warlike spear into the ground.

A bird new made, about the banks the pier,

Not far from shore, and short excursions tries.

Our house has sent to-day

T' insure our new-built vessel call'd a play.

Then curds and cream,

And new-laid eggs, which Baucus' busy care

Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare.

When pleading Metho, born abroad for air,

With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair.

A new-form'd fashion does your power oppose,
The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes.
Dryden.

If thou ken'st from far
Among the Pleiades a new-kindled star;
If any sparkles from the rest more bright,
'Tis he that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.

world, there could nothing of more delight have been left to posterity. Raleigh.

In these disturbances,
And newness of a warring government,
I wince them of their former grievances. Daniel.

When Houcer writ his satyrs, the monarchy of his Caesar was in its newness, and the government but just made easy to his conquered people. Dryd.

2. Novelty; inacquaintance.

Words borrowed of antiquity do lend majesty to style, they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace like newness. Ben Jonson.

Newness in great matters, was a worthy entertainment for a mind; it was an high taste, fit for the relish. South.

3. Something lately produced.

There are some newnesses of English, translated from the beauties of modern tongues, as well as from the elegancies of the Latin; and here and there some old words are sprinkled, which, for their significance and sound, deserved not to be antiquated. Dryden.

4. Innovation; late change.

Away, my friends, new flight;
And happy newness that intends old right. Shaksp.

Was next her side, in order sat the rest. Dryden.

The next in place and punishment were they Who prodigally throw their souls away. Dryden.

2. Nearest in time.

The good man warn'd us from his text,
That none could tell whole turn should be the next. Gay.

3. Nearest in any gradation.

If the king himself had stood at London, or, which had been the next best, kept his court at York, and sent the army on their proper errand, his enemies had been speedily subdued. Clarendon.

O fortunate young man! at least your lays
Are next to us, and claim the second praise. Dryd.

Finite and infinite, being by the mind looked on as modifications of expansion and duration, the next thing to be considered, is, how the mind comes by them. Locke.

That's a difficulty next to impossible. Ruse.

There, blest with health, with business unperplex'd,
This life we relish, and ensure the next. Young.

I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Psalms.

NIGRESCENT, adj. [nigrescens, Latin.] Growing black; approaching to blackness.

NIGRIFICATION, n. f. [niger and facio,
Lat.] The act of making black.

NIMILITY, n. f. [nihilus, Fr. nihilum, Lat.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing.

Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded;
and this we call pure nihilis, or mere nothing.

Watts's Logic.
To NIM. v. a. [from ne will; nillan, Sax.]

Not to will; to refuse; to reject.

Certes, said he, I will thus offer'd grace,

Ne to be made to happy do intend,

Another bliss before mine eyes I place,

Another happiness, another end. Spenser.

In all affections the concurrence still;

If now, with man and wife to will and will

The self-same things, a note of concord be,

I know no couple better can agree. Ben Jonson.

NILL, n. f. The shining sparks of brass in trying and melting the ore.

To NIM. v. a. [nemen, Dutch, to take.]

To take. In cant, to steal.

They'll question Mars, and by his look

Defect who 'twas that nim'd a cloak. Hudibras.

They could not keep themselves honest of their fingers, but would be nimming something or other for the love of thieving. Leittrung.

NIMBLE, adj. [from nim, or numan, Sax.

tractable.] Quick; active; ready; speedy;

lively; expeditious.

They being nimble-jointed than the rest,

And more industrious, gathered more store. Spenser.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes. Shakespeare.

You have dancing shoes

With nimble soles. Shakespeare.

His off'ring soon propitious fire from heaven,

Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam;

The others not, for his was not sincere. Milton.

Thro' the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails,

Aloof from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.

NIMBLENESS, n. f. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition;

swiftness.

The bounds were straight uncoupled, and ere long the flag thought it better to truit to the nimble-ness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodg'g. Sidney.

Instantly throwing at one instant both standards and umbles. Sidney.

All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offspring, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause said to excel in *nimble*ness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure and subtle spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing. Hooker.

We, lying still,

Are full of rest, defence and *nimble*ness. Shakespeare.

Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nimble- ness and agility; but as he did not much care for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill,

he was generally roving about the bottom. Addison.

NIMBLEWITTED, adj. [nimble and wit.]

Quick; eager to speak.

Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble-witted councillor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, unto him, There is a great difference betwixt you and me, a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon.

NIMBLY, adv. [from nimble.] Quickly; speedily; actively.

He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,

To the lascivious playing of a lute. Shakespeare.

The air

Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself. Shakespeare.

Most legs can nimbly run, though some be lame. Darwin.

The liquor we poured from the cry flab, and set it in a digging furnace to evaporate more nimbly. Boyle.

NIMBLESS. n. f. Nimbleness. Spenser.

NIMITY. n. f. [nimetus, school Latin.] The state of being too much.

NIMMER. n. f. [from nim.] A thief; a pilferer.

NINCOMPPOOP. n. f. [A corruption of the Latin non compo.] A fool; a trifler.

An old nunnyhammer, a dotard, a nincompoop, is the best language the can afford me. Addison.

NINE. n. f. [nium, Gothic; niwon, Saxon.] Our more than eight; one less than ten.

The wayward fillets,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine and three to mine,

And three again, to make up nine. Shakespeare.

A thousand ferules may flatter at first, and yet in conclusion prove but a nine-days wonder. L'Estr.

At ninety-nine, a modern and a dance. Pope.

The faults are nine in ten owing to affection, and not to the want of understanding. Swift.

NINEFOLD. n. f. [nine and fold.] Nine times; any thing nine times repeated.

This huge convex of fire,
Outragious to devour, immures us round Ninefold. Milton.

NINEPENCE. n. f. [nine and pence.] A silver coin valued at nine pence.

Three silver pennies, and a ninepence bent. Gay.

NINEPINS. n. f. [nine and pin.] A play where nine pieces of wood are set up on the ground to be thrown down by a bowl.

A painter made blossoms upon trees in December, and schoolboys playing at nine-pins upon ice in July. Pemham.

For as when merchants break, o'erthrown
Like nine pins, they strike others down. Hudibras.

NINESCORE. adj. [nine and score.] Nine times twenty.

Eugenius has two hundred pounds a year; but never values himself above ninescore, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses. Addison.

NINETEEN. adj. [nigontene, Sax.] Nine and ten; one less than twenty.

Nineteen in twenty of periphrastic words might be changed into easy ones, such as occur to ordinary men. Swift.

NINETEENTH. adj. [nigonteoða, Saxon.] The ordinal of nineteen; the ninth after the tenth.

In the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzradan. 2 Kings.

NINETIETH. adj. [humbigonteoða, Saxon.] The ordinal of ninety; the tenth nine times told.

NINETY. adj. [humbigontiz, Saxon.] Nine times ten.

Enos lived ninety years and begat Cainan. Gen.

NINNY. n. f. [nino, a child, Spanish.] A fool; a simpleton.

What a pidd ninny's this! Shakespeare.

The dean was so shabby, and look'd like a ninny, that the captain suppos'd he was a curate. Swift.

NINNYHAMMER. n. f. [from ninny.] A simpleton.

Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has saved that plod-pated, numskull'd ninnyhammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

NINTH. adj. [negoda, Saxon.] That precedes the tenth; the first after the eighth; the ordinal of nine.

Upon a strict observation of many, I have not found any that see the ninth day. Brown.

To NIP. v. n. [nippen, Dutch.]

1. To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth.

In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon.

2. To cut off by any slight means. The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nip'd off. Mortimer.

3. To blatt; to destroy before full growth. This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blooming honours thick upon him;

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;

And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare.

A flower doth spread and dye,
Thou would'st extend me to some good,
Before I were by host's extremity nip'd in the bud. Herbert.

His delivery now proves Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring.
Nip with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milt.

Had he not been nipp'd in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Addison.

From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been nip'd in the bud. Asbathnot.

4. To pinch as frost. The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold.—
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare.

When fishes hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
When blood is nip'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakespeare.

5. To vex; to bite. And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play. Spenser.

6. To satirize; to ridicule; to taunt sarcastically. But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the jayal to good men to nip. Hob. Tale.

Quick wit commonly he in desire new faneled;
in purpose inconsistent, bold with any person, busy in every matter; soothing such as he present, nipping any that is silent. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.

NIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pinch with the nails or teeth. I am sharply taunted, yes, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.

2. A small cut. What thin a sleeve? 'tis like a demicentaur;
What up and down wad'd like an apple tart?
Here's tuip, and a p, and cut, and fish and fath,
I like to a tender in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

3. A blatt. So hasty fruits and too ambitious flowers,
Scorning the midwifery of ripening showers,
In spite of frosts, spring from th' unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.

4. A taunt; a sarcasm. NIPPER. n. f. [from nip.] A satirist. Out of use.

Ready backbiters, sore nippers, and spiteful reporters privily of good men. Ajcham.

NIPPERS. n. f. [from nip.] Small pincers.

NIPPINGLY. adv. [from nip.] With bitter sarcasm.

NIPPLE. n. f. [nýpele, Saxon.]

1. The teat; the dug; that which the sucking young take into their mouths.

The babe that milks me.—
I would while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakespeare.

In creatures that nourish their young with milk, are adapted the nipples of the breast to the mouth and organs of suction. Ray on the Creation.

2. It is used by Chapman of a man. As his foe, went their fustid away, Thous Aetolus threw a dart, that did his pile convey Above his nipple, through his lungs. Chapman.

3. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated. In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham's Physico-Theology.

NIPPLEWORT. n. f. [lamsjana.] A weed.

NISI PRIUS. n. f. [In law.]

A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the in-que is pannelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the ease of the county. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the man impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ. So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Cowell.

NIT. n. f. [nitru, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or barrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bonyinous nois, or tickling them in sucking their nuts, or eggs, on the hair. Derham.

NITENCY. n. f. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [from nitro, Lat.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented: that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

NITING. n. f. [for niding; see NIDING.]

A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NITID. adj. [nitidus; Lat.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aquafortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle.

NITRE. n. f. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Lat.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline, pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acid and bitterish taste, impeding a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other solid substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorescences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation.
The nitrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts, being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not. It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, lumpy, light, and friable, and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. In Scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an absterive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt, but not with salt-petre, as do many different quantities ascribe to it by the ancients. Hill on Enigls.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Lustiest with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton.

Some sleep their feed, and some in cauldrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.

NITROUS. adj. [nitreux, Fr. from nitre.]

Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally. Bacon.

NO

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the element of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought to much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and wondrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily purfu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackm.

NITRY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.
Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the shabby mire, and kennels find. Gay.

NITILY. adv. [from nitty.] Lausily.
One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nitily needy, and therefore adventurous. Hayward.

NITTY. adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.

NIVAL. adj. [nivalis, Lat.] Abounding with snow.

NIVEOUS. adj. [niveus, Lat.] Snowy; resembling snow.

Cinabar becomes red by the acid exhalation of sulphur, which otherways presents a pure and niveous white. Brown.

NIZY. n. f. [from niais.] A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, and bid the trading nisy Go read Quantilian. Anon.

NO. adv. [na, Saxon.]
1. The word of refusal: contrary to yea or yes.

Our courtous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the seal. Shakspeare.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd,
In rusted yea and bonnet-kesty naes. Shakspeare.
If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calany's Sermons.

2. The word of denial, opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not fort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth —
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. —
—No, nor more fearful. Shakspeare.

Never more
This hand shall combat on the crooked shore:
No; let the Grecian pow'rs oppress in fight,
Unquy'd perish in their tyrant's sight. Dryden.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no, not, not even.

No not the bow which to adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boulds to many dies. Waller.

No. adj.

1. Not any; none.

Let there be no strife between me and thee. Gen.
Some dire misfortune to portend,
No enemy can match a friend. Swift.

Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

No wit to flatter left of all his store,
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

No weeping orphan saw his father's frowns
Our shines irradiate, or imblaze the frowns. Pope.

Our bard
No common object to your sight displays. Pope.

Poor Edwin was no vulgar boy. Beattie.

2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb:
as, the days are yet no shorter.

When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Samuel.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryd.

NOB

3. No one; none; not any one.
No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Smalbridge.

TO NOBILITATE. v. a. [nobilito, Latin.]
To ennoble; to make noble.

NOBILITY. n. f. [nobilitas, Latin.]

1. Antiquity of family joined with splen-dour.

When I took up Boccaccio unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood and titles, in the story of Signuuda. Dryd.
Long galleries of ancestors,
Challenge, not wonder, or esteem from me,
"Virtue alone is true nobility." Dryden.

2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns. Nobility in England is extended to five ranks; duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.

3. The persons of high rank; the persons who are exalted above the commons.

It is a purpos'd thing. Shakspeare.

To curb the will of the nobility.

4. Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though the hated Amphialus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and the desired he might be pardoned that youthful error, considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney.

But ah, my muse, I would thou hadst faculty
To work my goddess's by thy invention,
On me to call those eyes where flame nobility Sid.

Bafe men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakspeare.

They thought it great their foreign to controul,
And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.

NOBLE. adj. [noble, Fr. nobilis, Lat.]

1. Of an ancient and splendid family.

2. Exalted to a rank above commonality.

From virtue first began,
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood,
But that which made him noble, made him good.

3. Great; worthy; illustrious: both of men and things.

Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 Maccabees.

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Timorous. Milton.

A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but with tempest fell. Milton.

Those two great things that to engrave the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

4. Exalted; elevated; sublime.

My flame in pale Pyrene I rekindle,
And claim no part in all the mighty mine:
Statues, with winding ivy crown'd belong
To nobler poets, for a nobler song. Dryden.

5. Magnificent; stately: as, a noble parade.

6. Free; generous; liberal.

7. Principal; capital: as, the heart is one of the noble parts of the body.

NOBLE. n. f.

1. Of high rank.

Upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand. Exodus.

How many nobles then should hold their places
That must strike sail to spirits of vile fort? Shakspeare.

What the nobles once said in parliament, Nobis
leges Anglie mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people. Bacon.

The nobles amongst the Romans took care in their last wills, that they might have a lump in their monuments. Watkins.

See labour nobles begging to be slaves,
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expence of time or study.
Swift's Modern Education.

NOB

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies, or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority. These easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.

Men should press forward in Fame's glorious chace.

Nobles look backward, and to lose the race. Young.

2. A coin rated at six shillings and eight pence; the sum of six and eight-pence.
He coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold.
C Camden.

Many fair promotions
Are daily given, to ennoble those That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakspeare.

Upon every writ procured for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble, that is six shillings and eight pence, is, and usually hath been paid to fine. Bacon.

NOBLE LIVER. wort. [hepatica.] A plant.

NOBLEMAN. n. f. [noble and man.] One who is ennobled.

If I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakspeare.

The nobleman is he, whose noble mind
Is fill'd with inborn worth. Dryden.

NOBLENESS. n. f. [from noble.]

1. Greatness; worth; dignity; magnanimity.

The nobleness of life
Is to do this; when such a mutual pair,
And such a twain can do't. Shakspeare.

Any thing
That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose. Shakspeare.

True nobleness would Lend him forbearance from to foul a wrong. Shakspeare.

He that does as well in private between God and his own soul, as in public, hath given himself a testimony that his purposes are full of honesty, nobleness, and integrity. Taylor.

Greatness of mind, and nobleness, their seat
Build in her love's heart. Milton.

There is not only a congruity herein between the nobleness of the faculty and the object, but also the faculty is enriched and advanced by the worth of the object. Hale.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, which was the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.

2. Splendour of descent; lustre of pedigree.

NOBLESS. n. f. [noblesse, French.]

1. Nobility. This word is not now used in any sense.

Fair branch of nobles, flower of chivalry,
That with your worth the world amaze make. Spenser.

2. Dignity; greatness.

Thou whose nobles keeps one stature still,
And one true posture, tho' belieg'd with ill. Ben Jonson.

3. Noblemen collectively.

Let us haste to hear it,
And call the nobles to the audience. Shakspeare.

I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England to be foremost in brave actions, which the nobles of France would never suffer in their peasants. Dryden.

NOBLE. adj. [from noble.]

1. Of ancient and splendid extraction.

Only a second laurel did adorn
His colleague Catulus, tho' nobly born:
He dur'd the pride of the triumphal bay,
But Marus won the glory of the day. Dryden.

2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.

Did he not straight the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Shakspeare.

This fate he could have escap'd, but would not lose Honour for life, but rather nobly chose Death from their tears, than safety from his own. Denham.

NOC

3. Grandly; splendidly.

There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument. Addison on Italy.

NOBODY. n. f. [no and body.] No one; not any one.

This is the time of our catch plant by the picture of nobody. Shakspeare.

It fell to Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was out of his office. Clarendon.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you on your own laughter, you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgment; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

NO'CENT adj. [nocens, Latin.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

The evil of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than nocent, yet as one, that might be the object of others' plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon's Henry vii.

2. Hurtful; mischievous.

His head, well-flor'd with subtle wiles:
Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the gaily herb,
Fearless, uncares'd, he slept. Milton.

 On the fierce pains not feel. Milton.

But how perplexed, alas! is human fate?
 I whom not avenger, nor pleasures move;
 Yet must myself be made a slave to love. Walsh.

NORTH, n. f. [noth, Sax.] The point opposite to the sun in the meridian.

More inconsistent than the wind, who woos
 I've now the frozen bottom of the north;
 And being anger'd pulls away from thence,
 Turning his face to the dew dropping tooth. Shakespeare.

NOT

The warbling bird tunes her nocturnal note.

Milton.

I now must change
Those notes to tragedy.
You that can tune your sounding string to wail,
Of ladies beauties and of love to tell;
One change your note, and let your late report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court

Milton.

One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike

Dryden.

8. Single sound in music.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began;
From harmony to harmony
Thou all the compass of the notes art run,
The diapason closing full in man

Dryden.

9. Short hint; small paper; memorial register.

He will'd me

In heedfull'st reservation to bellow them,
As notes whole faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note.
In the body's pulpit to the hew,
A- through the body's windows the must look,
If divers powers of sense to enter be,
By passing notes out of the world's gate

Dryden.

10. Abbreviation; symbol; musical character.

Contract it into a narrow compass by the fix'd
And abbreviations

Baker in L. George.

11. A small letter.

And he came with a letter hand the broad letter,
But in the narrow hand he had a note

Dryden.

12. A written paper.

I can't give over the prejudice of taking to be Infringe at the clergy for perpetually reaching their common; perhaps my frequent hearing, of to singers, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust

Swift

13. A paper given in confession of a debt.

His note will go further than my bond.

Southey

14. Explanatory annotation.

The best writers have been perplexed with it, and obscured with illustrations

Milton

This put him upon a close of decision to his friends. He kept much at home, and went out upon House and Church

Southey

To NORR, v. a. [note, Lat. nota, Fr.]
1. To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.

The fool hath much more to say.

No more of that, I have noted it well.

Shakespeare

It much you note him,

You shall offend him

Shakespeare

Some things may in passing be fitly noted.

Hemans

I began to note

The stormy Hyades, the many goat

Adrian

Wandering from chase to chase, obedient pray'd,
Their manners noted, and their faces survey'd.

Pope.

2. To deliver; to set down.

Saint Augustine speaking of devout men, noteth how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the lessons and chapters read

Hooker.

3. To charge with a crime; with of or for.

Sine velle Dianam, agrees better with Lavin, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency

Dryden.

4. [In music.] To set down the notes of a tune.

NOTT BOOK, n. f. [note and book.] A book in which notes and memorandums are set down.

Callus all his faults observ'd;

Set in a notebook, learn'd and can't by rote,

To call into my teeth.

Shakespeare.

NOTED, part. adj. [from note.] Remarkable; eminent; celebrated.

NOT

A noted chymist procured a privilege, that none but he should vend a spirit.

Boyle.

Justinian's laws, if we may believe a noted author, have not the force of laws in France or Holland.

Baker.

NOTER, n. f. [from note.] He who takes notice.

NOTHING, n. f. [no and thing; nothing, Scottish.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation; opposed to something.

It is not certain, that there never could be nothing. For if there could have been no instant, wherein there was not a thing, then either nothing made something, or something made nothing, and to say, and not it, before it was. But if there never could be nothing, then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning.

Locke

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing, we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it.

Bentley

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense, to say, there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it, but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is a matter.

Watts

2. Nonexistence.

Almighty nature's character's are graded
To deny nothing

Shakespeare

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

There shall nothing die.
Yet had his aspect not one of severe,
But such a face as promised him peace

Dryden

His philosophy wholly speculative is barren, and produces nothing but vain ideas

Dryden

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone.

Addison on the War

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice,
God's grace and his commandments obey'd, and his pardon begged, nothing but this will inture you to God's acceptance.

Hooker

Words are made to declare something, where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise noted, they conceal indeed nothing, but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or stupidity of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing to be under them.

Locke

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their leaders.

Cicero

6. No importance; no use; no value.

The outward show of churches draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice tools say, there is nothing in the seemingly form of the church.

Spenser

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught.

Isaiah

7. No possession of fortune.

A most humble shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unenviable estate.

Shakespeare

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts.

Ray

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and otherwise, is great, but nothing to the profit.

Euclid

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.

I had rather have one scratch my head if I'll fun, When the alarm was struck, then idly sit
To hear my nothings moulder.

Shakespeare

My dear nothings, take your leave
No longer must you me deceive.

Crahan

This nothing, says the fool, but says the fool,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your drooping belly swell?

Dryden

That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the foregoing perpetual business of having no business to do.

Pope's Letters

Narcissus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace?

Young

NOT

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worthy?

Job

Amidst nothing dissuayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course.

Knolles

But Adam, with such comely nothing twy'd.

Milton

NOTHINGNESS, n. f. [from nothing.]

1. Nihilty; nonexistence.

His art did expel
A quietness even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness.

Donne

2. Nothing; thing of no value.

I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did seem to him his former care.

Hudibras

NOTICE, n. f. [notice, Fr. notice, Lat.]

1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.

The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's misbehavior is, what root it springs from.

Locke

This is done with little notice, very quick actions of the mind are performed.

Locke

How ready is every one to quarrel with the notice which we take of their persons?

Watts

2. Information; intelligence given or received.

I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his estates will be here.

Shakespeare

NOTIFICATION, n. f. [notification, Fr. from notice.]

Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.

One or five notes here elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or length, many,
by agreement, give great variety of notifications.

Holder

TO NOTIFY, v. a. [notifier, Fr. notifier, Lat.]

To declare; to make known; to publish.

There are other kind of laws, which not only the will of God

Hooker

Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are noted and conveyed to the mind.

Southey

This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year;
a kind of standard by which we measure time.

Holder

NOTION, n. f. [notion, Fr. notion, Lat.]

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the proper notion of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men.

Peirson

The notion of some beings which are not in nature, second notions as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being.

Dryden

Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind.

Southey

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write.

Newton

There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and its laws, and yet few agree in their notions about these words.

Cheyne

That notion of hunger, cold, found, colour, thought, with, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, found, with, &c.

Watts

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us, such we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts and notions vain.

Milton

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbors.

Addison

Sensualists they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come.

Atterbury

3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.

His notion weakens, his discernings

Shakespeare.

So full, earthly notion can receive. Milton.

- NOTIONAL, adj. [from notion.] 1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fanciful.

The general and relative imaginations and notions of the clergy, and those of laymen, of the influences of heaven and hell, of the shade, being but notional and imaginary, and of course to be drawn out of the mind. Plato.

Happily, the force of the waking dream

When we call him, making, fugitive theme

Of a prison, given, clear, and ready. Prior.

Notional good, by the young mind.

We must be wary, lest we mistake any real substance of performance, in the content of the story, for a merely notional and imaginary thing; and the most accurate of us, when properly inquiring, do not permit our own understanding, or should by our reflecting upon the fabled cause of things, denoting only thus much, that all the bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consideration of our intention in doing. Bacon.

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The most favored notional dictators sit down in an empty room. Glanville.

- NOTIONALLY, n. f. [from notional.]

Empty, ungrounded opinion. Not in use.

I amed at the appearance of fence, by different and empty and talkative notionally. Glanville.

- NOTIONALLY, n. f. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception,

though not in reality.

The whole rational sum of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really, or notionally distinct. Locke.

- NOTORIETY, n. f. [from notoriety, Fr. from notorius.]

Public knowledge; public exposure.

We read a multitude of pages of notoriety may be produced for all the remarkable passages, and indeed of several, that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature to expand to such a length. Addison.

- NOTORIOUS, adj. [from notoriety, Lat. notorius, Fr.]

Publicly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a no- torious crime, when public or notorious.

What need you make such a flourish about a matter too notorious. Whitgift.

The goods of your intercepted packets

You want to lay open to the sun, your goods are, Shakespeare.

Since you provoke me, shall the most notorious

I shall have law in Epitaph. Shakespeare.

To your notorious sin. Shakespeare.

In the time of King Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Danvers.

This preposterous man of war congratulates a celebration in notorious sin, committed by a zealot of his own devotion. White.

We think not fit to condemn the most notorious misbehavior before he hath had leisure to propitiate his plea. Lat.

What notorious vice is there that doth not blis-

shame a man's reputation? Plutarch.

The philosopher of Naples has been always a very notorious for leading a life of luxury and dissipation, which was partly out of the plenty of money, and partly out of the temper of his climate. Lat.

The philosophers procured some small advantage of fees; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Scipio.

- NOTORIOUSLY, adv. [from notorious.]

Publicly; evidently; openly.

The exposing himself notoriously, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarke.

This is notoriously discoverable in some dis-ferences of brake or fern. Penn.

God tells us, that the eagle was not roughly known at Rome, though it be left to obscure to us. Dryden.

Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexion, which do all notoriously vary in every age. Sage.

NOTORIOUSNESS, n. f. [from notorious.]

Public fame; notoriety.

To notoriety, a. To hear. Inflection.

How shall any man distinguish between a parasite and a man of honour, who is hypocritical and utterly look to like duty and affection? Leitch.

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground their lives on human authority, even when they most pre-empt divine. Hooker.

Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character. Drach.

A most effectual argument against spontaneous generation is, that there is no now species produced, which would now and then happen, were there any such thing. Ray.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper. Atter.

They now and then appear in the offices of religion, and avoid some scandalous enormities. Rogers.

7. Now and then are applied to places considered as they rise to notice in succession.

A mead here, there a heath, and now and then a wood. Drayton.

Now, n. f. Present moment. A poetical use.

Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
But an eternal now does ever last. Cauley.
She vanish'd, we can scarcely say she dy'd,
For but a now did heav'n and earth divide:
This moment perfect heath, the next was death. Dryden.

Not less ev'n in this despicable now,
Than when my name ill'd Africk with affrights. Dryden.

Nowadays, adv. [This word, though common and used by the best writers, is perhaps barbarous.] In the present age.

Not to great as it was wont of yore,
It's nowadays, he half to sit and fore. Spenser.
Reason and love keep little company together nowadays. Shakespeare.

It was a vestal and a virgin fire, and diuersed as much from that which pulses by this name nowadays, as the vital heat from the burning of a fever. South.

Such are those principles, which by reason of the cold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men, we are nowadays put to defend. Tillotson.

What use of spirit nowadays,
Come to give sober judgment of new plays. Garrick.

No'wed, adj. [from nou, Fr.] Knotted; in-wreathed.

Reuben is conceived to bear three barres waved,
Judah a lion rampant, Dan a serpent armed. Brown.

Nowes, n. f. [from nou, old Fr.] The marriage knot. Out of use.

Thou shalt look round about and see Thousands of crown'd souls throng to be Themselves thy crown, sons of thy nowes;
The virgin births with which thy spouse
Made fruitful thy fair soul. Crashaw.

No'where, adv. [from no and where.] Not in any place.

Some men, of whom we think very severely, have in their books and writings, nowhere mentioned or taught that such things should be in the church. Hooker.

True pleasure and perfect freedom are nowhere to be found but in the practice of virtue. Tillotson.
No'wise, adv. [from no and wise; this is commonly spoken and written by ignorant barbarians, noways.] Not in any manner or degree.

A power of natural gravitation, without contact or impulse, can in nowise be attributed to mere matter. Bentley.

Noxious, adj. [from noxius, Lat.]

1. Hurtful; harmful; baneful; mischievous; destructive; pernicious; unwholesome.

Preparation and correction is not only by addition of other bodies, but separation of noxious parts from their own.

Kill noxious creatures, where 'tis sin to save,
This only just prerogative we have. Dryden.

See pale Orion sheds his hoar-come dews,
And, the pines a noxious shade diffuse;
Sharp Pallas blows, and sturdy Teles decay,
Time conquers all, and we must time obey. Pope.

Noxious seeds of the disease are contained in a smaller quantity in the blood. Blackmore.

2. Guilty; criminal.

Those who are noxious in the eye of the law, are justly punished by them to whom the execution of the law is committed. Brankall against Hobbes.

3. Unfavourable; unkindly.

Too frequent an appearance in places of much resort, is noxious to spiritual promotions. Swift.

No'xtiously, adv. [from noxius.] Hurtfully; perniciously.

No'xtiousness, n. f. [from noxius.] Hurtfulness; insalubrity.

The writers of politics have warned us of the noxiousness of this doctrine to all civil governments, which the christian religion is very far from disturbing. Hammond.

No'zle, n. f. [from nose.] The nose; the snout; the end.

It is nothing but a paucity old scone, with the nose broke off. Arbutnot and Pope.

To No'bble, v. a. [properly to knubble, or knoble, from knob, for a clenched fist.] To bruise with handy cuffs. Aspleyworth.

Nubiferous, adj. [from nubifer, Lat.] Bringing clouds.

To Nubilate, v. a. [from nubilo, Lat.] To cloud.

Nubile, adj. [from nubilis, Fr. nubilis, Lat.] Marriageable; fit for marriage.

The cowslip smiles, in brighter yellow dress,
Than that which veils the nubile virgin's breast. Prior.

Nuciferous, adj. [from nux and fero, Lat.] Nutbearing.

Nucleus, n. f. [Lat.] A kernel; any thing about which matter is gathered or conglobated.

The nuclei are each in all parts nearly of the same thickness, their figure suited to the nucleus, and the outer surface of the flume exactly of the same form with that of the nucleus. Woodward.

Nudation, n. f. [from nudo, Fr. nudo, Lat.] The act of making bare or naked.

Nudity, n. f. [from nudus, Fr. nudus, Lat.] Naked parts.

There are no such licences permitted in poetry, any more than in painting, to design and colour obscene nudities. Dryden.

Nulle, See NEWEL.

Nugacity, n. f. [from nugax, Lat.] Futility; trifling talk or behaviour.

Nugation, n. f. [from nugor, Lat.] The act or practice of trifling.

The opinion, that putrefaction is caused by cold, or perigee and preternatural heat, is but nugation. Bacon.

Nugatory, adj. [from nugatorius, Lat.] Trifling; futile; insignificant.

Some great men of the last age, before the mechanical philosophy was revived, were too much addicted to this nugatory art: when occult qualities, and sympathy and antipathy, were admitted for satisfactory explanations of things. Bentley.

Nuisance, n. f. [from nuisance, Fr.]

1. Something noxious or offensive.

This is the har's lot, he is accounted a pest and nuisance; a person marked out for infamy and ruin. South.

A wife man who does not assist with his counsel, a rich man with his charity, and a poor man with his labour, are perfect nuisances in a commonwealth. Swift.

2. [In law.] Something that incommodes the neighbour.

Nuisances, as necessary to be swept away, as dirt out of the streets. Kittlesell.

To Null, v. a. [from nullus, Lat.] To annul; to annihilate; to deprive of efficacy or existence.

Thy fair enchanted cup, and warbling charms,
No more on me have power, their force is null'd. Milton.

Reason hath the power of nulling or governing all other operations of bodies. Grew.

Null, adj. [from nullus, Lat.] Void; of no force; ineffectual.

With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife, by her procuring husband sold?

For tho' the law makes null the adulterous deed,
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryden.

Their orders are accounted to be null and invalid by many. Leffoy.

The pope's confirmation of the church lands to those who held them by king Henry's donation, was null and fraudulent. Swift.

Null, n. f. Something of no power, or no meaning. Marks in ciphered writing which stand for nothing, and are inserted only to puzzle, are called nulls.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

Nulliberty, n. f. [from nullibi, Latin.] The state of being nowhere.

To Nullify, v. a. [from nullus, Latin.] To annul; to make void.

Nullity, n. f. [from nullus, Lat.]

1. Want of force or efficacy.
It can be no part of my business to overthrow this distinction, and to show the nullity of it; which has been solidly done by most of our polemic writers. South.

The jurisdiction is opened by the party, in default of justice from the ordinary, as by appeals or nullities. Aylmer.

2. Want of existence.

A hard body struck against another hard body, will yield an exterior sound, inasmuch as if the percussion be over soft, it may induce a nullity of sound; but never an interior sound. Bacon.

Numb, adj. [from nummen, numm, Sax.]

1. Torpid; deprived in a great measure of the power of motion and sensation; chill; motionless.

Like a stony statue, cold and numb, Shakespeare.
Laying long upon any part maketh it numb and asleep; for that the compression of the part suffereth not the spirits to have free access; and therefore when we come out of it, we feel a stinging or pricking, which is the re-entrance of the spirits. Bacon.

2. Producing chillness; benumbing.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lay me
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakespeare.

To NUMB, v. a. To make torpid; to make dull of motion or sensation; to deaden; to stupify.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Plough naked, swain, and naked sow the land,
For lazy winter numbs the lab'ring hand. Dryden.

Nought shall avail
The pleasing song, or well repeated tale,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has embrac'd the ear. Prior.

NUMBEDNES, n. f. [from numbed.] Torpor; interruption of sensation.

If the nerve be quite divided, the pain is little,
Only a kind of stupor or numbedness. Wyeeman.

To NUMBER, v. a. [from numbrer, Fr. numero, Latin.]

1. To count; to tell; to reckon how many.
If a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Genesis.

I will number you to the sword. Isaiah.
The gold, the vest, the tripods number'd o'er,
All these he found. Pope.

2. To reckon as one of the same kind.
He was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many. Isaiah.

NUMBER, n. f. [from nombre, Fr. numerus, Lat.]

1. The species of quantity by which it is computed how many.
Hye thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead. Shaks.

The silver, the gold, and the vessels, were weighed by number and by weight. Ezra.

There is but one gate for strangers to enter at, that it may be known what numbers of them are in the town. Addison.

2. Any particular aggregate of units, as even or odd.
This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers; they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shaks.

3. Many; more than one.
Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

Water lilly hath a root in the ground; and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds. Bacon.

Ladies are always of great use to the party they espouse, and never fail to win over numbers. Addison.

4. Multitude that may be counted.
Of him came nations and tribes out of number. 2 Esdras.

Loud as from numbers without number. Milton.

5. Comparative multitude.
Number itself importeth not much in armies,
where the people are of weak courage; for, as Virgil says, it never troubles a wolf how many the sheep be. Bacon.

6. Aggregated multitude.
If you will, some few of you shall see the place;
and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land. Bacon.
Sir George Sumners, sent thither with nine ships and five hundred men, lost a great part of their numbers in the ill of Bermudas. Heylin.

7. Harmony; proportions calculated by number.

They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, tow'rd his all-cheering lamp, Milton.

8. Verses; poetry.
Then feed on thoughts that voluntary move,
Harmonious numbers, as the warbling bird Sings, sparkling. Milton.

Yet should the muses bid my numbers roll
Strong as their charms, and gentle as their soul. Pope.

9. In grammar.

In the noun is the variation or change of termination to signify a number more than one. When men first invented names, their application was to single things; but soon finding it necessary to speak of several things of the same kind together, they found it likewise necessary to vary or alter the noun. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

How many numbers is in nouns?—
—Two. Shakespeare.

NUMBERER, n. f. [from number.] He who numbers.

NUMBERLESS, adj. [from number.] Innumerable; more than can be reckoned.

I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Guinist me. Shakespeare.

About his chariot numberless were pour'd Cherub and seraph. Milton.

Deserts so great,
Though numberless, I never shall forget. Denham.

The soul converses with numberless beings of her own creation. Addison.

Travels he then a hundred leagues,
And suffers numberless fatigues. Swift.

NUMBLES, n. f. [from numbles, Fr.] The entrails of a deer. Bailey.

NUMBNESS, n. f. [from numb.] Torpor; interruption of action of sensation; coldness; stupefaction.

Stir, nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness; for from him
Dear life redeems you. Shakespeare.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness, erase my limbs
To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton.

Cold numbness's trait bereaves
Her corps of sense, and the air her soul receives. Denk.

Silence is worse than the fiercest and loudest ac-cuseations; since it may proceed from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain, or make a stir. South.

NUMERABLE, adj. [from numeralis, Latin.] Capable to be numbered.

NUMERAL, adj. [from numeral, Fr. from nume-rus, Lat.] Relating to number; consisting of number.

Some who cannot retain the several combinations of numbers in their distinct orders, and the dependence of a long a train of numeral progressions, are not able to tell their lifetime regularly to go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

NUMERALLY, adv. [from numeral.] According to number.

The blasts and caducary breaths thereof maintain no certainty in their course; nor are they numerally fear'd by navigators. Brown.

NUMERARY, adj. [from numerus, Lat.] Belonging to a certain number.

A superstitious canon, when he obtains a pre-bend, becomes a numerary canon. Dyloff.

NUMERATION, n. f. [from numeration, Fr. numeratio, Lat.]

1. The art of numbering.
Numeration is but full the adding of one unite more, and giving to the whole a new name or sign, whereby to know it from those before and after. Locke.

2. Number contained.
In the legs or organs of progression in animals, we may observe an equality of length, and parity of numeration. Brown.

3. The rule of arithmetick which teaches the notation of numbers, and method of reading numbers regularly noted.

NUMERATOR, n. f. [Lat.]

1. He that numbers.

2. [from numeratus, Fr.] That number which serves as the common measure of others.

NUMERICAL, adj. [from numerus, Lat.]

1. Numeral; denoting number; pertaining to numbers.

The numerical characters are signs to the memory, to record and retain the several ideas about which the demonstration is made. Lege.

2. The same not only in kind or species, but number.

Contemplate upon his astonishing works, particularly in the resurrection and reparation of the same numerical body, by a re-union of all the lost and scattered parts. Smith.

NUMERICALLY, adv. [from numerical.]
With respect to sameness in number.

I must think it improbable, that the sulphur of antimony would be but numerically different from the distilled butter or oil of roses. Boyle.

NUMERIST, n. f. [from numerus, Latin.]
One that deals in numbers.

We cannot assign a respective fatality unto each which is concordant unto the doctrine of the numerists. Brown.

NUMEROUSITY, n. f. [from numerosus, Lat.]

1. Number; the state of being numerous.
Of assertion if numerous of allitters were a sufficient demonstration, we might at down herein as an unquestionable truth. Brown.

2. Harmony; numerous flow.

NUMEROUS, adj. [from numerosus, Lat.]

1. Containing many; consisting of many;
not few; many.

Queen Elizabeth was not so much obferved for having a numerous, as a wise council. Bacon.

We reach our foes,
Who now appear so numerous and bold. Waller.

Many of our felicities in the west, were never heard of by the numerous christian churches in the east of Asia. Telfey.

2. Harmonious; consisting of parts rightly numbered; melodious; musical.

Thy heart, no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous man Melt to compassion. Waller.

His verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious, that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him. Dryden.

NUMEROUSNESS, n. f. [from numerous.]

1. The quality of being numerous.

2. Harmony; musicalness.

That which will distinguish his style is, the numerousness of his verse. There is nothing so delicately turned in all the Roman language. Dryden.

NUMMARY, adj. [from nummus, Latin.]
Relating to money.

The money drachma in process of time decreased;
but all the while the ponderal drachma continued the same, just as our ponderal libra remains as it was, though the nummary hath much decreased. Arbutnot.

NUMMULAR, adj. [from nummularius, Latin.]
Relating to money.

NUMSKULL, n. f. [probably from numb, dull, torpid, insensible, and skull.]

1. A dullard; a dunce; a dolt; a block-head.

They have talked like numskulls. Ascham.

2. The head. In burlesque.
Or toes and fingers, in this case,
Of numskull's self should take the place. Prior.

NUMSKULLED, adj. [from numskull.]
Dull; stupid; doltish.

Focus has faced that eld pated, numskulled, nimnyhammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbutnot.

NUM, n. f. A woman dedicated to the severer duties of religion; secluded in a cloister from the world, and debarred by a vow from the converse of men.

My daughters
Shall all be praying nuns, not weeping queens. Shaks.

A devout nun had vowed to be some young child, and bestow her whole life, and utmost industry to bring it up in strict piety. Hammond.

The most blooming toast in the island might have been a nun. Addison.

Ev'ry shepherd was undone, Swift.
To see her cloister'd like a nun.

NUNNERY, n. f. [from nun,] A house of nuns; of women under a vow of chastity, dedicated to the severer duties of religion.

I put your sister into a nunnery, with a strict command not to see you, for fear you should have wrought upon her to have taken the habit. Dryden.

NUPTIAL, adj. [nuptial, Fr. nuptialis, Lat.] Pertaining to marriage; used or done in marriage.

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant Bona to England's king. Shakespeare.

Because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage. Bacon.

Then all in heat
They light the nuptial torch. Milton.

Whoever will undertake of God's secrets, must pare off whatsoever is unuseful, not eat of this sacrifice with a defiled head, nor come to this feast without a nuptial garment. Taylor.

Fit'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed. Dryden.

Let our eternal peace be seal'd by this,
With the first ardour of a nuptial kiss. Dryden.

NUPTIALS, n. f. Like the Latin without singular. [nuptie, Lat.]

1. Marriage.
This is the triumph of the nuptial day,
My better nuptials, which in spite of fate,
For ever join me to my dear Morat. Dryden.

It is in Shakespeare singular, but contrarily to use.

Lift up your countenances, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come. Winter's Tale.

NURSE, n. f. [nourrice, Fr.]

1. A woman that has the care of another's child.

Unnatural curiosity has taught all women, but the beggar, to find out nurses, which necessity only ought to command. Raleigh.

2. A woman that has care of a sick person.
Never mother had,
A page so kind, so dutiful, diligent, Shakespeare.

So fast, so nurse-like.
Ours Mrs. Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook. Shakespeare.

3. One who breeds, educates, or protects.

Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us. Shakespeare.

We must lose
The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. Shakespeare.

4. An old woman, in contempt.
Can tales more senseless, ludicrous, and vain,
By winter-fires old nurses entertain? Blackmore.

5. The state of being nursed.
Can wedlock know to great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

6. In composition, any thing that supplies food.
Put into your breeding pond three melters for one spawner; but if into a nurse pond or feeding pond, then no care is to be taken. Walton.

To NURSE, v. a. [from the noun, or by contraction from nourish; nourrir, Fr.]

1. To bring up a child or any thing young.
I was nursed in swaddling cloths with cares. Widdow.

Him in Egerian groves Aricia bore,
And nurs'd his youth along the marshy shore. Dryden.

2. To bring up a child, not one's own.
Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child? Exodus.

3. To feed; to keep; to maintain.
Thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Isaiah.
Our monarchs were acknowledged here,
That they their churches nursing fathers were. Denham.

The Niseans in their dark abode, Nurs'd secretly with milk the thriving god. Addison.

4. To tend the sick.

5. To pamper; to foment; to encourage; to soften; to cherish.
And what is strength, but an effect of youth, which if time nurse, how can it ever cease? Davies.

By what fate has vice so thriven amongst us, and by what hands been nurs'd up into so uncontrollable a dominion? Locke.

NURSER, n. f. [from nurse.] One that nurses. Not used.

See where he lies, inhered in the arms
Of the most bloody nurse of his harms. Shakespeare.

2. A promoter; a fomentor.
NURSERY, n. f. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing.
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shakespeare.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care.
She went forth among her fruits and flowers,
To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom
Her nursery: they at her coming sprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendence gladder grew. Milton.

3. A plantation of young trees to be transplanted to other ground.
Your nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors; and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names. Addison.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up.
I th' swathing cloaths, the other from their nursery
Were stol'n. Shakespeare.

You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At nuns' elbow when she lies
Or stands before the nursery doors.
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have publick nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated. Swift.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children; or whence any thing is to be removed, from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser.

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakespeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

NURSING, n. f. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.
Then was the held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursing of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursing once, and choice delight,
His dearest from the womb. Milton.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.

NURTURE, n. f. [contracted from nouriture, French.]

1. Food; diet.
For this did th' angel twice descend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred. Milton.

2. Education; institution. Little used.
She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser.

The thorny point
Of bare distress, hath ta'en from me the flow
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakespeare.

To NURTURE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.
Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturedst it in thy law, and reformedst it with thy judgment. Esdras.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten. Wotton.

When an insolent despoiler of discipline, nurtured into impudence, shall appear before a church government, severity and resolution are that government's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.
They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley.

To NUSTLE, v. a. To fondle; to cherish.
Corrupted from nurgle. See NUZZLE. Ainsworth.

NUT, n. f. [hnut, Sax. noot, Dutch; noix, French.]

1. The fruit of certain trees: it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the centre of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chance'd to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had,
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you free from peril. Dryden.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

NUTBROWN, adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long.

NUT

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail.
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale.
When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach-huge he laid about.
Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lady, Erastus,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss.
King Hardicnutte, 'midst Danes and Saxons stout,
Carb'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout.
NUTCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.]
An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.
He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison.
NUTGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Hard excrecence of an oak.
In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.
NUTHATCH. } n. f. [picus martius.] A
NUTJOBBER. } bird. Ainsworth.
NUTPECKER. }
NUTHOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.]
1. A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.
2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt.
Nuthook, nuthook, you lie. Shakespeare.
NUTMEG. n. f. [nut and muguet, Fr.] The kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace, before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweetmeat, or as a curiosity.
There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. Hill.
The second integument, a dry and stoculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown.
I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.
NUTSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.]
1. The hard substance that encloses the kernel of the nut.

NUT

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a King of infinite space.
It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.
2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.
A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell I had never got off again. L'Estrange.
NUTTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts: commonly a hazel.
Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak.
Peacham.
Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.
NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Latin.] Manner of feeding or being fed.
Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition. Brown.
NUTRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Lat.]
That which feeds or nourishes; food;
aliment.
This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shak.
The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.
Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago? -
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift.
NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.]
Having the qualities of food; alimental.
By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arbuthnot.
NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutrio,
Lat. nutrition, Fr.]
1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or increasing growth.
2. New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decaying; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glanville.
The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in the glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbuthnot.
2. That which nourishes; nutriment. Less properly.
Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NYS

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutritio, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing.
O may 't thou give me
Thy furrows white'd by the woolly reas
Nutritious! secret nitro lurks within. Philips.
The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious;
and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbuthnot.
NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutritio, Latin.] Nourishing; nutrimental; alimental.
While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they secrete a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through. Blackm.
NUTRITURE. n. f. [from nutritio, Latin.]
The power of nourishing. Not used.
Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nature. Harvey.
TO NUTZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurse; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]
1. To nurse; to foster.
Old men long nursed in corruption, learning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.
2. To go with the nose down like a hog.
He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nursing like an eel in the mud. Arbuthnot.
Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbuth.
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.
NYMPH. n. f. [νύμφη; nymphe, Lat.]
1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.
And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.
2. A lady. In poetry.
This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.
NYMPHICAL. adj. [from nymph.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.
Tending all to nymphish war. Dryden.
NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is;
not is. (Obsolete).
Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buidest wrong mark upon a weak ground. Spenser.

O

O

O Has in English a long sound; as,
drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke,
coal, drall; or short, got, not, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a ferveile a subjoined; as, moan; or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bône:
when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as,
droll, scoll, and even then sometimes short; as, loll.
1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O A F

O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger!
Decay of Pleety.
O! were he present, that his eyes and hands
Might see, and urge, the death which he commands.
Dryden.
2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.
Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France! or may we cram
Within this wooden O, the very earth
That did affright the air at Agincourt. Shakespeare.
OAF. n. f. [This word is variously writ-

O A F

ten; ouff, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of orphe, a demon or fairy; in German aff, from which eff; and means properly the same with changing; a foolish child left by malevolent orphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]
1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.
There, when a child happens to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When folk perceive it thrive not,
2 B 2

OAK

The fault therein to smother :
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oak,
And took away the other. Drayton.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.
OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Stupid; dull;
doltish.

OAKENNESS. n. f. [from oakish.] Stupidity; dulness.

OAK. n. f. [ac, æc, Sax. which, says Skinner, to show how easy it is to play the fool, under a show of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from oak, a house; the oak bring the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junonia in his thoughts, who on this very word has thrown his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave Crusick, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode duci potest, from oak, strength; by taking the three first letters, and then linking the o, as is not uncommon; quecus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small tender thyrses. The embryos, which are produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakespeare.

He lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakespeare.

No tree beareth so many bailard fruits as the oak; for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree,
and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.
A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incruited and adixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Fossils.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK Evergreen. n. f. [illex.]
The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable clureoval in the world. Milner.

OAKAPPLE. n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrecence on the oak.

Another kind of excrecence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon.

OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber where with to build ships. Bacon.

By lot from Jove the power
Of this oak wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.
Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken gurland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Adelphi.

OAT

He snatch'd a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbuthnot.

OAKKIPIN. n. f. An apple.
Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OAKUM. n. f. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopp'd.

They make their oakum, wherewith they caulk the seams of the ships, of old leers and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown to rotte; as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which muddlers and wasters away with every tea as the ships labour and are toiled. Raleigh.
Some drive old oakum thro' each fern and rill;
Their left hand does the caulking-noug guide;
The rathling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. f. [ape, Sax. perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with car, to plow; aro, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pulling on the vessel.

It's oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As anxious of their strokes. Shakespeare.
So tow'd a ship the oar-finn'd galleys ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to wait reveng'd. Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untam'd Indian, on the stream did glide,
E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.
He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.
His bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lully strokes
To th' shore. Shakespeare.

OARV. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.
The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly row's
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

OAST. n. f. A kiln. Not in use.
Empty the bun into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCAKE. n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron, Peucham.

OATEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When thepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughing clocks. Shakspeare.

OATH. n. f. [oith, Gotluck; oð, Saxon.] The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may show that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages. [An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over John's heart, thy first best love,
For thou dear oath thou oath didst read thy faith
In thou oath oath; and all those oaths Defended into perjury to love me. Shakespeare.

OBD

All the oath-rites said,
I then ascended her adorned bed. Chapman.
We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not; and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it; but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE. adj. [from oath.] A word not used. Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable.
Altho' I know you'll swear
Into strong shoulders th' immortal gods. Shakespeare.

OATHBREAKING. n. f. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now torturing that he is *oath*sworn. Shakspeare.

OATMALT. n. f. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barley malt. Mortimer.

OATMEAL. n. f. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scalp on the head. Arbuthnot.
Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of oatmeal, leather, oatmeal, brain, and chalk. Gay.

OATMEAL. n. f. [panicum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS. n. f. [uten, Sax.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.

It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. Shakespeare.
It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oat bread, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer.
His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATTHISTLE. n. f. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OBAMBULATION. n. f. [obambulatio, from obambulo, Lat.] The act of walking about. Dict.

To OBDUCE. v. a. [obduco, Lat.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cuts. Hale.

OBDUCTION. n. f. [from obductio, obduco, Lat.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBDU'RACY. n. f. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart.

Thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Fallail, for obduracy and persistency. Shakespeare.
God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in obduracy. South.

OBDRURATE. adj. [obduratus, Latin.] 1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when will he might have slain thee; Shakespeare.

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakespeare.
If when you make your pray'r,
God should be so obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls? Shakespeare.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou art, obdurate, stout, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.

To convince the proud what sign avail,

Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim.
Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request.
Dryden.

1. Hardened; firm; stubborn: always with some degree of evil.

Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatever instructive to the contrary.
Hooder.

A pleasing sorcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Fulfilious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel.
Milton.

No such thought ever sinks his marble obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from
it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all letters of pity and compulsion.
South.

3. Harsh; rugged.

They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel.
Smyt.

OBDU'RATELY. adv. [from obdurate]

Stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently.

OBDU'RATENESS. n. f. [from obdurate.]

Stubbornness; inflexibility; impenitence.

OBUR'ATION. n. f. [from obdurate.]

Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obdurate in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended?
Hooder.

This barren season is always the reward of obstinate obdurate.
Hammond.

OBUR'AD. adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent.

This was his hapless fate, but flood obdur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs Intensate.
Milton.

OBDI'ENCE. n. f. [obediencia, Fr. obediencia, Lat.] Obedience; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obedience.
Thy husband
Shaksp.

Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience.
Shaksp.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness.
Romans.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men to furiously assailed, to hold their hands.
Bacon.

In vain thou bid'st me to forbear,
Obedience were rebellion here.
Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou did'st want,
Obedience to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death.
Milton.

We must beg the grace and assistance of God's spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obedience to him.
Duty of Man.

The obedience of men is to imitate the obedience of angels, and rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him.
Law.

OBDI'ENT. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; complaint with command or prohibition; obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things.
2 Corinthians.

To this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise.
Shakspere.

Religion both a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another.
Tillotson.

The chief his orders gives; th' obedient band,
With due observance, wait the chief's command.
Pope.

OBDI'ENTIAL. adj. [obediens, Fr. from obediens.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and observance of submission to the command.
Hammond.

Faith is then perfect when it produces in us a fiducially assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obedient submission to the commands.
Woke's Preparation for Death.

OBDI'ENTLY. adv. [from obediens.] With obedience.

We should behave ourselves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men.
Tillotson.

OBE'ISANCE. n. f. [obsequencia, French.] This word is formed by corruption from oban-sance, an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Partholomew my page,
See dress'd in all suits like a lady;
Then call him madam, do him all obeisance.
Shaksp.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king.
1 Kings.

The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade.
Dryden.

OBE'LIUS. n. f. [obeliscus, Latin.]

1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid.
Harris.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.
Pope.

2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].

He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant.
Grew.

OBEQUIT'ATION. n. f. [from obiquito,
Lat.] The act of riding about.

OBER'RATION. n. f. [from oberro, Latin.]
The act of wandering about.

OBE'USE. adj. [obefus, Lat.] Fat; laden with flesh.

OBE'SENS. } n. f. [from obese.] Morbid OBE'SITY. } fatness; incumbrance of flesh.

On these many diseases depend; as on the struggles of the chest, a phthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an aneurysm; on their smallness, obesity.
Grew.

To OBE'Y. v. a. [obey, Fr. obedire, Lat.]

1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.

The will of Heaven
Be done in this and all things! I obey.
Shakspere.

I am admir'd, that women are so humble
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Shaksp.

Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.
Romans.

The ancient Britons yet a scepter'd king obeyed.
Dryden.

Was he thy God, that he thou didst obey.
Before his voice?
Milton.

Africk and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagand sway,
Beyond the solar year, without the flurry way.
Dry.

2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obey au roi.

He commanded the trumpets to sound; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their lances.
Sidney.

The bit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as she did desire.
Spenser.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Remember did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they too obey'd.
Milton.

OBJECT. n. f. [objet, Fr. objet, Lat.]
1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.

Pardon
The first untraced spirit, that hath dar'd
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object.
Shakspere.

They are her farthest reaching instruments,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent.
Davies.

And in the eyes with pointed angles end.
The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed.
Hammond.

The act of faith is applied to the object according to the nature of it; to what is already past, ad past; to what is to come, as still to come; to that which is present, as it is still present.
Perkins.

Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praise.
Spruit.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will.
Dryden.

As you have no mistress to serve, so let your own soul be the object of your daily care and attendance.
Law.

2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind,
Dis honour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object.
Shakspere.

Why do this double object in our sight,
Of sight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground?
Milton.

This passenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew.
Asterbury.

3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.

The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called by grammarians, the object of the verb.
Clarke.

OBJECT-GLASS. n. f. Glass of an optical instrument remotest from the eye.

An object-glass of a telescope I once mented, by guiding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the guiding, lest the putty should scratch it.
Newton.

To OBE'CT. v. a. [objecter, Fr. objec-tionem, Lat.]

1. To oppose; to present in opposition.

Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will show more to us as they be object to view at once.
Bacon.

Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condemn'd the skies.
Pope.

2. To propose as a charge criminal, or a reason adverse; with to or against.

Were it not some kind of blameth to be like unto infidels and heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries.
Hooder.

The book requir'd due examination, and given liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered.
Whitgift.

Men in all deliberations find one to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties, when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed,
it requires new work; which false point of wisdom is the base of business.
Bacon.

The old truth was, object ingratitude, and ye object all crimes: and is it not an old truth, it is not a higher truth, object rebellion, and ye object all crimes.
Whitgift.

This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all.
Spruit.

It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like.
Dryden.

Others obscure the purity of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies.

Addison's State of the War.

There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.
OBJECTION. n. f. [objection, Fr. objection, Lat.]

1. The act of presenting any thing in opposition.

2. Criminal charge.

Speak on, sir, I dare your worst objections. Shakspeare

3. Adverse argument.

There is ever between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after related. Bacon.

Whoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet.

4. Fault found.

I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Walsh's Letter.

OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watts.

2. Made an object; proposed as an object; residing in objects.

If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]

1. In manner of an object.

This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that same object of the mind. Locke.

2. In the state of an object.

The business should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown.

OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.]

The state of being an object.

Is there such a motion of objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of sight is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectiveness fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.

But these objectors must the cause upbraid, That has not mortal man immortal made. Blackmore.

Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley.

OBITU. [a corruption of obit, or obit.]
Funeral obsequies. Ainsworth.

To OBJURGATE. v. a. [objurgo, Latin.]

To chide; to reprove.

OBJURGATION. n. f. [objurgatio, Latin.]

Reproof; reprehension.

If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations? Bramhall.

OBJURGATORY. adj. [objurgatorius, Lat.]

Reprehenitory; culpatory; chiding.

OBULATE. adj. [obolatus, Lat.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.

By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its centre, though not exactly thither, by reason of the oblate spheroidal figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

OBLATION. n. f. [oblation, Fr. obolatus, Lat.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence.

She looked upon the picture before her, and straight sigh'd, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations. Sidney.

Many conceive in the oblation of Jephthah's daughter, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world. Brown.

The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest. South.

The kind oblation of a falling tear. Dryden.

Behold the coward, and the brave

All make oblations at this shrine. Swift.

OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, Latin.]

Delight; pleasure.

To OBLIGATE. v. a. [obligo, Lat.] To bind by contract or duty.

OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from obligo, Lat. obligation, Fr.]

1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.

Your father lost a father; That father his; and the survivor bound In filial obligation, for some term, To do obsequious farrow. Shakspeare.

There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction. Wilkins.

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.

No ties can bind; that from constraint arise, Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Græc.

2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Taylor.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South.

OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, Fr. from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.

And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes and states. Bacon.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.

To OBLIGE. v. a. [obliger, Fr. oblige, Lat.]

1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.

All these have moved me, and some of them obliged me to commend these my labours to your grace's perusal. White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called catholic, in reference to the universal obedience which it preferibeth; but as regard to the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands. Peterson.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers.

2. To indebted; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.

Since love obliges not, I from this hour Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled, To think thy wit these godlike notions bred! These truths are not the product of thy mind, But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind: Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight, And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar, And would not be obliged to God for more. Dryden.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train, When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain, She waits wot to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals, and to them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferior, than by disdainning him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are so frow and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.

Happy the people who preserve their honour, By the same duties that oblige their prince! Addison.

OBLIGE. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal and written contract.

OBLIGEMENT. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligement, that you lay upon me. Milton.

Let this fair prince's but one minute stay A look from her will your obligements pay. Dryden.

OBLIGER. n. f. He who binds by contract.

OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligeant, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; complaisant; respectful; engaging.

Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange.

Monseigneur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them. Addison.

Obliging creatures! make me see All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.

So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.

OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.

Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.

I see her taste each nauseous draught, And so obligingly am caught; I bless the hand from whence they came, Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift.

OBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from obliging.]

1. Obligation; force.

They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse provocations. Decay of Piety.

2. Civility; complaisance.

OBLIQUATION. n. f. [obliquatio, from obliquo, Lat.] Declination from straightness or perpendicularity; obliquity.

The change made by the obliquation of the eyes is less in colours of the denser than in this substance. Newton.

OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, French; obliquus, Latin.]

1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.

One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies.

If found be stopped and repercussed, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon.

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn.

Bavaria's flag must be accus'd which shone,
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the Gallic sun.

It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion.

Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it cast in such and such a position.

2. Not direct; indirect; by a side glance.

Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him.

3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.

OBLIQUELY. adv. [from oblique.]

1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.

Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January.

Declining from the noon of day.
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray.

2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.

They haply might admit the truths obliquely levelled, which banefulness persuadeth not to cure for.

His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself.

OBLIQUENESS, n. f. [obliquité, Fr. from OBLIQUITY. oblique.]

1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.

Which else to several spheres thou wilt ascribe,
Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities.

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity.

Count Rhodophil, cut out from government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities.

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity.

To OBLITERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and litera, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments.

Let men consider themselves as in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the devil's possession, and consider how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls.

These simple ideas the understanding can no more be made to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images which the objects set before it produce.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Latin.]

Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmutations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all the monuments of antiquity that ages precedent to some time have yielded.

OBLIVION. n. f. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget.

2. Amnesia; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [obliviosus, Lat.] Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom.

The British souls

Fault to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!

Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake.

OBLONG. adj. [oblong, Fr. oblongus, Lat.]

Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong form.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

OBLIQUELY. n. f. [obloquor, Latin.]

1. Cenforious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being directly subject unto that bitter end of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmful, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions, so we peradventure might be upbraid'd, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old defects.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounc'd and sworn?

Shall names, that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction?

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true gemmes, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My clarity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy it th' world
Is us to lose.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from oblivio, Lat.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear of producing obliviousness.

OBLIVIOUSLY. adv. [obliviosus, Latin.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws.

2. Liable to punishment.

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like a ting Hester, does before you stand,
Watching your sceptre.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and bountifulness; and that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cur'd death, to expiate our offences.

Thy name, O Venus, if the kindred pow'rs
Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan tow'rs, Obnoxious by Cremo's neighbouring crime,
The wings of Ixion, and stronger plumed things Shall taste aloft.

3. Reprehensible; not of sound reputation.

Conceiving it most reasonable to search for primitive truth in the primitive writers, and not to suffer his understanding to be prepossessed by the contrived and interested schemes of modern, and without obnoxious authors.

4. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Descend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,
To basest things.

Beasts lie down,
To dew obnoxious on the grassy floor.

They leave the government a trunk ask'd, defenceless, and obnoxious to every storm.

OBLIVIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxious.]

In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxious.]

Subjection; liability to punishment.

To OBLIVIOUSLY. v. a. [obnubilo, Lat.]

The act of creeping on with secrecy or by surprise.

To OBLIVIOUSLY. v. a. [obrogo, Lat.]

To proclaim a contrary law for the dissolution of the former.

OBLIVIOUSLY. adv. [obscene, Fr. obscenus, Latin.]

1. Immoral; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing lewd ideas.

Chemus th' obscene dread of Mithra's sons.
Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the light obscene to lately view'd.

3. Insipid; ill-omened.

Cate looks thy walk, as at the cheerful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take light.

It is the fair's fate like you's, to be dissembling to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre.

OBLIVIOUSLY. adv. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [obscenité, French, from obscene.]

Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit.

Those fables were tempered with th' Italian severity, and free from any note of insipid or obscenity.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber du king thence by break of day.
To walk the obsequies of night away. Dryden.
No pious art obscurely should find,
Thou art an art confute to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION, n. f. [obscuratio, Latin.]
1. The act of darkening.

2. A state of being darkened.
As to the sun and moon, their obscuratio or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

OBSCURE, adj. [obscur, Fr. obscurus, Lat.]

1. Dark; unlightened; gloomy; hindering light.

Who's cursteth his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscur darkness. Francis.
Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscur find out
His unsmooth way? Milton.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscur bird clamours in the live-long night.
Shakspeare.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

Explain some of the most obscur passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and thus according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.

4. Not noted; not observable.

He says, that he is an obscur person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

TO OBSCURE, v. a. [obscurare, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

'They are all couched in a pit hard by Hercules's oak, with obscured light; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakspeare.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds wail'd, and the furies roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole.
Pope.

2. To make less visible.

What must I hold a candle to my flames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscured. Shakspeare.

Thinking by this argument to obscure himself from God, he infringed the omniscience and effectual ubiquity of his Maker. Brown.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private content it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue.
Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured by the writings of learned men, as this.
Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think't thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And scit not in obscur thy godlike frame?
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shows me what thy faded looks did hide.
Dryden.

5. To conceal; to make unknown.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad.
Milton.

OBSCURELY, adv. [from obscur.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice;

not conspicuously.

Such was the role of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did loose to open streets aspire. Dryd.

There we retir'd,
Content thyself to be obscurely good. Addison.

3. Not clearly; not plainly; darkly to the mind.

The woman's food at first obscurely told,
Now ampler known, thy Saviour and thy Lord.
Milton.

OBSCURENESS, n. f. [obscuritas, Latin;
obscurité, French.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! astay of darkness and obscurité, tribulation and anguish upon the earth. Esther.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venns, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them obscurité now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurité design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.
Dryden.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that obscurité that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscur. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred Scripture had difficulties in it, many causes of obscurité did readily occur to me. Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurité, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

OBSCURATION, n. f. [obscuratio, from ob- scuro, Lat.] Entreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuratio.
Stillingfleet.

OBSEQUES, n. f. [obseques, Fr.] I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequia, Lat. this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.]

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorlaus valiantly requiring his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Fair Juliet, that with angels doth remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shakspeare.

I spare the widows tears, thy woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Thebans at these funeral did afflict,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss.
Dryden.

His body shall be royally interred,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.

Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker, dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Crashaw.

Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton.

OBSEQUIOUS, adj. [from obsequium,
Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not the rising son, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon.

At his command the uprooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they obsequious his voice, and went Obsequious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I follow'd her; what was honour knew,
And, with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton's Paradise Lost.

See how obsequious wind and liquid air
The Theban obsequies doth upward bear. Cowley.

A genial obsequious host acts upon the fit and obsequious matter as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

His servants weeping,
Obsequious to his orders, bear him thither. Addison.

The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party. Sayl.

2. In Shakspeare, it seems to signify, funceral; such as the rites of funerals require.
Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Hamlet.

OBSEQUIOUSLY, adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,
At the word giv'n, obsequiously withdraw. Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation. Locke.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.
I a while obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster. Rich. III.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS, n. f. [from obsequious.]

1. Obedience; compliance.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequious- ness, the surest and the readiest way to advance a man. South.

OBSEVRABLE, adj. [from obseruo, Lat.]

Remarkable eminent; such as may deserve notice.

They do bury their dead with obsevrable ceremonies. Abbot.

Their proprieties affixed unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those obsevr- able points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations. Brown.

I took a just account of every obsevrable circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal. Woodw.

The great and more obsevrable occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom. Rogers.

OBSEVRABLY, adv. [from obsevrable.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky,
as is obsevrably recorded in some histories. Brown.

OBSEVRANCE, n. f. [obsevrance, Fr. ob- sevrare, Latin.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.

In the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do obsevrance on the morn of May. Shakspeare.

Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay
Obsevrance to the month of merry May. Dryden.

2. Religious rite.

Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy obsevrances, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life. Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.

Use all th' obsevrance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad osient
To please his grandam. Shakspeare.

Love rigid honesty
And strict obsevrance of impartial laws. Roscommon.

If the divine laws were proposed to our obsevr- ance, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an artifice. Rogers's Sermons.

4. Rule of practice.

There are other strict obsevrances;
As, not to see a woman. Shakspeare.

5. Careful obedience.

We must attend our Creator in all th' ordinances which he has prescribed to the obsevrance of his church. Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.

There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant obsevrance of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths. Hail's Origin of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard; reverential attention.

Having had such experience of his ability and obsevrance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him. Hume.

OBSEVRANT, adj. [obsevrans, Latin.]

1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.
These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant spectators of those masters they admired.
Wandering from chime to chime observant stray'd.
Their manners noted, and their fates survey'd.
Pope.

Roderick.

OBSERVANT, n. f. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakespeare.]
A slavish attendant. Not in use.
The e kind of knaves in this plannet,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observant.
That stretch their duties widely.
Shakespeare.

OBSERVATION, n. f. [observatio, from ob- servo, Latin; observation, French.]
1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.
Those cannot be instructed by observation, but only by the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; is the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing described by it.
Socrates.

The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation.
Harris.
2. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.
In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making what observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it.
Harris.

3. Obedience; ritual practice.
He fixed and delivered the children church from the external observation and obedience of all such legal precepts, as were not simply, and formally moral.
Harris.

OBSERVATOR, n. f. [observateur, Fr. from observo, Lat.] One that observes; a remarker.
The observer of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that his pages have swept away.
Harris.

they obstruct and swell them with little tumours. Blackmore.

But people are subject to weakness in fevers, because the fat, melted by seventh heat, obstructs
the small canals. Arbuthnot.

2. To oppose; to retard; to hinder; to be in the way of.

No cloud inter-
Or bar to obstruct his sight. Milton.

OBSTRUCTER. n. f. [from obstruere, Lat.] One that hinders or opposes.

OBSTRUCTION. n. f. [from obstruere, Lat. obstruction, Fr. from obstruere.]

1. Hindrance; difficulty.

Sure God by these difficulties did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine,
But the obstruction from that diffracted springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt christian kings. Dennis.

2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.

All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away. Ke g. Ch.

In his winter quarters the king's expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon.

Whenever a popular assembly free from obstructions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same assembly produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome. Saunders.

3. In phisick.

The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel. Quincy.

4. In Shakspeare it once signifies something heaped together.

Aye, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This scabbish wain motion to become A knotted clod. Measure for Measure.

OBSTRUCTIVE. adj. [from obstruere, Fr. from obstruere.] Hindering; causing impediment.

Having thus separated this doctrine of God's pre-determining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the improving of our good life. Hammond.

OBSTRUCTIVE. n. f. Impediment; obstacle.

The second obstructive is that of the fiducy, that faith is the only instrument of his justification, and excludes good works from contributing any thing towards it. Hammond.

2. To pretend; to offer as the reason of any thing.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
Obtending heav'n for what'er ill befall. Dryden.

OBTENEBRATION. n. f. [from obtenebratio, Latin.] Darkness; the state of being darkened; the act of darkening; cloudiness.

In every integrit or vertigo, there is an obtenebration joined with a scumblance of turning round. Bacon's Natural History.

OBTESSION. n. f. [from obteendere.] The act of obteending.

TO OBTESTATE. v. a. [obtestor, Lat.] To beseech; to supplicate.

Suppliants demand
A truce, with olive branches in their hand;
Obtest his clemency, and from the plain Beseege to draw the bodies of their slain. Dryden.

OBTESTATION. n. f. [from obtestatio, Lat. from obtestor.] Supplication; entreaty.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [obtrusio, Latin.]
Slander; detraction; calumny.

TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrudo, Lat.] To thrust into any place or state by force or imposture; to offer with unreasonable importunity.

It is their torment, that the thing they shun doth follow them, truth, as it were, even obtruding itself into their knowledge, and not permitting them to be so ignorant as they would be. Hooker.

There may be as great a vanity in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits from the world, as in obtruding them. Bacon.

Some things are easily granted; the rest ought not to be obtruded upon me with the point of the sword. King Charles.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors six books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be, under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded
upon God and his church? Hall.

Why should thou then obtrude this diligence upon me, where no acceptance it can find? Milton.

Whatever was not by them thought necessary, must not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that dialogue. Hammond.

A cause of common error is the credulity of men;
that is, an easy assent to what is obtruded, or believing at first ear what is delivered by others. Brown.

The objects of our senses obtrude their particular ideas upon our minds, whether we will or no; and the operations of our minds will not let us be without some obscure notions of them. Locke.

Whether thy great forefathers came
From realms that bear Vesputio's name;
For so conjectures would obtrude,
And from thy painted skin conclude. Swift.

OBTRUDER. n. f. [from obtrude.] One that obtrudes.

Do justice to the inventors or publishers of the true experiments, as well as upon the obtruders of false ones. Boyle.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.]

The act of obtruding.

No man can think it other than the method of slavery, by savage rudeness and inopportune obtrusions of violence, to have the mist of his errors and passion dispelled. King Charles.

OBTRUSIVE. adj. [from obtrude.] Inclined to force one's self, or any thing else, upon others.

Not obvious, not obtrusive, but retir'd
The more desirable. Milton.

TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrudo, Latin.] To blunt; to dull; to quell; to deaden.

Avicen countermands letting blood in choleric bodies, because he esteems the blood a bridle of gall, obtruding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.]

The act of stopping up any thing with something finereared over it.

OBTRUSION. adj. [from obtrusus and angle.] Having angles larger than right angles.

OBTRUSION. adj. [from obtrusus, Latin.]

1. Not pointed; not acute.

Obtruse, all taste of pleasures must forego. Milton.

3. Not shrill; obscure: as, an obtruse sound.

OBTRUSION. adv. [from obtrusus.]

1. Without a point.

2. Dully; stupidly.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus.] Bluntness; dulness.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

Obtrusion of the senses, internal and external.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.] Something happening not constantly and regularly, but uncertainty; incidental advantage.

When the country grows more rich and better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions, will also be more augmented and better valued. Spenser.

TO OBVERT. v. a. [obverso, Latin.] To turn toward.

The laborant with an iron rod stirred and kindled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obverted to the air. Bode.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superfluities, that look some one way, and some another, enough of them obverted to his eye to afford a confused idea of light. Bayle on Colours.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if its base be obverted towards us. Watts' Logic.

TO OBVIATE. v. a. [obvius, Latin; obvier, Fr.] To meet in the way; to prevent by interception.

To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far. Woodwards.

OBVIOUS. adj. [obvius, Latin.]

1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.

2. Open; exposed.

Whether such room in nature unpossessed
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which retains Light back to them, is obvious to dispute. Milton.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found; Swift has used it harshly for easily intelligible.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye could hold,
So obvious and so easy to be quenched? Milton.

Enter'd with solitude,
Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unsought. Milton.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and undervalues it. Deben.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to children. Swift.

These sentiments, whether they be expressed on the soul, or arise as obvious reflections of our reason, I call natural, because they have been found in all ages. Rogers.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious, the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed. Rogers.

O'BVIOUSLY. adv. [from obvious.]

1. Evidently; apparently.

All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush contain no instruction. Locke.

2. Easily to be found.

For France, Spain, and other foreign countries, the volumes of their laws and lawyers have enough particulars concerning place and precedence of their magistrates and dignities. Selden.

3. Naturally.

We may then more obviously, yet truly, liken the civil state to bulwarks, and the church to a city. Hobbes.

O'VIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obvious.] State of being evident or apparent.

Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried; I thought their cautions or obviousness better to recommend than depreciate them. Boyle.

TO O'BUMBRATE. v. a. [obumbrō, Lat.] To shade; to cloud.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villiers, dispelled all those clouds which had hang over and obumbrate him. Howell.

O'UMBRATION. n. f. [from obumbrō, Lat.]

The act of darkening or clouding.

OCCASION. n. f. [occafio, Fr. occafio, Latin.]

1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.

The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occafio in the writings of the apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal form. Hooker.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Me unwetted, and unaware of such mishap,
She brought to mischief through occafio,
Where this same wicked villain did me light upon. Spenser.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occafio, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen. Genesis.

Use not liberty for an occafio. Galatians.

Let me not let pass

occafio which now smiles. Milton.

I'll take th' occafio which he gives to bring

Him to his death. Waller.

With a mind as great as theirs he came

To find at home occafio for his fame,

Where dark confusions did the nations hide. Wall.

From this admonition they took only occafio to redouble their fault, and to sleep again. Smith.

This one has occafio of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome. Addison.

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occafio and first beginning of this custom? Spenser.

That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occafio, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool. Shakespeare.

The fair for whom they strove,

Nor thought, when she beheld the light from far

Her beauty was th' occafio of the war. Dryden.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occafio revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression. Locke.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.

Your business calls on you,

And your embrace th' occafio to depart. Shaksp.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never master had

A page so kind, so dutious, diligent,

So tender over his occafio. Shakespeare.

Antony will use his affection where it is:

He m' trust but his occafio here. Shakespeare.

My occafio gives me found time to use them toward a supply of money. Shakespeare.

They who are desirous of a mine in painting, should seek with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occafio. Deben.

Syllogism made use of on occafio to discover a fallacy had in a rhetorical flourish. Locke.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occafio of the church in its purer ages. Baker.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occafio of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display

His powers in equal ranks, and fair array,

But with th' occafio and the place comply,

Conceal his force, may, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

TO OCCASION. v. a. [occafioner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occafioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit. Locke.

The good Psalmist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occafioned in him. Atterbury.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great increase of that disease may not have been occafioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables. Temple.

A consumption may be occafioned by running fores, or obvious fistulas, whose secret cures and winding barrows empty themselves by copious discharges. Blackmore.

By its syptic quality it affects the nerves, very often occafioning tremors. Arbuthnot.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occafions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCASIONAL. adj. [occafionel, Fr. from occafio.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of Scripture, to verify our explication of the Deluge, according to the Mofical history of the flood, according to many occafional reflections dispersed in other pieces of Scripture concerning it. Barnet.

2. Producing by accident.

The ground or occafional original heretofore, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Produced by occafio or incidental exigence.

Besides these constant times, there are likewise occafional times for the performance of this duty. Duden.

Those letters were not writ to all;
Nor first intended but occafional,
Their absent reasons. Deben's Hind and Penth.

OCCASIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.]

According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason for her wait,
As one intended first, but after made occafional. Milton.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions tone of the proofs wherein they depend, and occafional scatter several in the more important observations throughout the work. Woodward.

OCCASIONER. n. f. [from occasio.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way lessen her respect of her brother's lot, whom she regarded all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occafioners. Sidney.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolved occafioner of my own and my subjects' miseries. King Charles.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, when by it happens his neighbour's head to fall therein and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occafioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sunderlin.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [occultatio, from occuro, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.

Those places speak of obduration and occultation, so as if the blindness is that is in the minds, and hardenings that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sunderlin.

OCCIDENT. n. f. [from occidens, Latin.]

The west.

The envious clouds are bent

To dim his glory, and to stain the tract

Of his bright passage to the occident. Shakespeare.

OCCIDENTAL. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.]

Western.

He twice in morn and occidental damp,

Moist Helpeus hath quenched his sleepy lamp. Shakespeare.

If he had not been drained, the night have filled her palaces with occidental cold and liver. Howell.

East and west have been the obvious occasions of philosophers, magnifying the condition of India

above the setting and occident of humanity. Brown.

OCCIPUT. n. f. [occiput, Latin.] Placed in the hinder part of the head.

OCCIPUT. n. f. [Lat.] The hinder part of the head.

His broad-brim'd hat
 Flings o'er his caput most quaintly,
 To make the knave appear more faintly. Butler.
OCCURSION, n. f. [from occursio, Lat.] The act of killing.

To OCCUL'DE, v. a. [occludo, Latin.] To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, Secretly occulding the pores they confesse the nu-tural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Bacon.

OCCUL'SE, adj. [occlusus, Lat.] Shut up; closed.

The apulite is either plenary and occlusus, so as to preclude all passage of breath or voice through the mouth, or else partial and previous, so as to give them some passage out of the mouth. Holder.

OCCULSION, n. f. [from occlusio, Latin.]
 The act of shutting up.

OCCULT, adj. [occulte, Fr. occultus, Lat.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoverable.

If his occult guile

Do not itself uncover in one speech,

It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Hamlet.

An infant will play a lesson on an instrument without finding a frow, and our tongues will conduce in a tune not mixing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere; which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the least of our intellects. Glenville.

There intimis we call occult qualities, which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. Leffrange.

There are manifest qualities, and their causes only occult. And the Aristotelians give the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newton's Opticks.

OCCULTATION, n. f. [occultatio, Lat.] In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCULTNESS, n. f. [from occult.] Secretnels; state of being hid.

OCCUPANCY, n. f. [from occupans, Lat.]
 The act of taking possession.

Of necessities, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement. Warburton on Literary Property.

OCCUPANT, n. f. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of bees and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant, but of civil people not so. Bacon.

To OCCUPATE, v. a. [occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunk men are taken with a plain definition in voluntary motions, for that the spirit of the wine oppresses the spirits animal, and occupies part of the place where they are, and to make them weak to move. Bacon.

OCCUPATION, n. f. [from occupation, Fr.
occupatio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.

Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches and unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.

Such were the disputes of the then infant world;
 so negligent their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to consult any thing to winning. Woodward.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then find up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade, calling; vocation.

The rod peltence strike all crudes in Rome,
 And occupations perish. Shakespeare.

He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts.

OCCUPIER, n. f. [from occupy.]

1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.

If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be had accounted in a country peopled thus? Raleigh.

2. One who follows any employment.

Thymarchus he and the occupiers of thy merchandise shall fall into the midst of the seas. Es. l. cl.

To OCCUPY, v. a. [occupier, Fr. occupy,
 Lat.]

1. To possess; to keep; to take up.

How shall he that occupies the room of the un-learned say, When at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? 1 Cor. xii.

Powder being suddenly fired altogether, upon this high elevation, requireth a greater space than before it is occupied. Bacon.

He must affect infinite generations before that first deluge; and then the earth could not receive them, but the infinite bodies of men must occupy an infinite space. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To busy; to employ.

An archbishop may have cause to occupy more chaplains than fix. Ann of Henry VIII.

They occupied themselves about the tabernacle, yielding exceeding praise to the Lord. 2 Mac. vi.

How can he get wisdom that dwells even and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of lock-locks? Eccl. i. viii.

He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancient, and be occupied in prophecies. Eccl. i. viii.

3. To follow as business.

They occupy their business in deep waters.
Common Prayer.

Mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Eccl. i. viii.

4. To use; to expand.

All the gold occupied for the work, was twenty and nine talents. Exod. x.

To OCCUPY, v. n. To follow business.

He called his ten servants, and delivered their ten pounds, and laid into them, Occupy till I come. Luke.

To OCCUR, v. n. [occurro, Lat.]

1. To be presented to the memory or attention.

There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon.

The mind should be always ready to turn itself to the variety of objects that occur, and allow them as much consideration as shall be thought fit. Locke.

The far greater part of the examples that occur to us, are to many encouragements to vice and disobedience. Rogers.

2. To appear here and there.

In Scripture though the word here occur, yet there is no such thing as it is on our author's sense. Locke.

3. To clash; to strike against; to meet.

Bodies have a determinate motion according to the degrees of their external impulse, their mass and principle of gravitation, and the resistance of the bodies they occur with. Boyle.

4. To obviate; to intercept; to make opposition to. A latinism.

Before I began that, I must occur to one specious objection against this proposition. Locke.

OCCURRENCE, n. f. [occurrence, French;
 from occur; this was perhaps originally occurrences.]

1. Incident; accidental events.

In education most time is to be bestowed on that which is of the greatest consequence in the ordinary course and occurrences of that life the young man is designed for. Locke.

2. Occasional presentation.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. White.

OCCURRENT, n. f. [occurrent, Fr. occurrens, Latin.] Incident; any thing that happens.

Contentions were as yet neverable to prevent two evils, the one a mutual exchange of unequally and unjust disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work upon all occurrences, with most advantage in private. Hooker.

He did himself certify all the news and occur-rents in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon.

OCCURSION, n. f. [occursio, Lat.] Clash; mutual blow.

In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of the deliquated parts may, by their various occursio occasioned by the heat, stick closely. Boyle.

Now should those active particles, ever and anon jostled by the occasion of other bodies, to orderly keep their cells without alteration of fire. Clam.

OCCURSION, n. f. [occurro, Fr. occurro, Lat.]

1. The main; the great sea.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
 And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
 Gilds the zodiac. Shakespeare.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? Shakespeare.

2. Any immense expanse.

Time, in general, is to duration, as place to expansion. They are so much of those boundless oceans of eternity and immensity, as is set out and distinguished from the rest, to denote the position of finite real beings, in those uniform, infinite oceans of duration and space. Locke.

OCCURSION, adj. [This is not usual, though conformable to the original import of the word.] Pertaining to the main or great sea.

In bulk as huge as that sea-beast
 Leviathan, which God of all his works Created hugest that swim the ocean stream. Milton.

Boundless were fet
 To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave. Milton.

OCCURSION, adj. [from occurro.] Pertaining to the ocean.

OCCURSION, adj. [occellatus, Lat.] Resembling the eye.

The white butterfly lays its offspring on cabbage leaves, a very beautiful reddish occellated one. Bertram.

OCCURSION, n. f. [ochre, Fr. ochre.]

The earths distinguished by the name of ochres are those which have rough or naturally dusky surfaces, are but slightly coherent in their texture, and are composed of fine and soft argillaceous particles, and are readily diffusible in water. They are of various colours; such as red, yellow, blue, green, black. The yellow sort are called ochres of iron, and the blue ochres of copper. Hill.

OCCURSION, adj. [from ochre.] Consisting of ochre.

In the interstices of the flakes is a grey, chalky, or ochreous matter. Woodward.

OCCURSION, adj. [from ochre.] Partaking of ochre.

This is conveyed about by the water; as we find in earthy, ochrey, and other loose matter. Woodward.

OCCURSION, n. f. [formed by corruption from alchemy.] A mixed base metal.

OCCURSION, n. f. [octo and gonia.] In geometry, a figure consisting of eight sides and angles; and this, when all the sides and angles are equal, is called a regular octagon, which may be inscribed in a circle. Harris.

OCCURSION, adj. [from octagon.] Having eight angles and sides.

It there be a speck in the eye, we take it off, but he were a strange oculist who would pull out the eye. Bacon.

I am no oculist, and if I should go to help my eye and put out the other, we should have an untoward business. L. Strange.

OCULUS belli. [Latin.]

The oculus belli of jewellers, probably of Pliny, is an accidental variety of the agat stone, having a grey hoary ground, circular delineations, and a spot in the middle resembling the eye; whence its name. Boissard.

ODD. a. f. [udda, Swedish.]

1. Not even; not divisible into equal numbers.

This is the third time; Thope.

Good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakespeare.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of men by even and odd; a cribbing the odd unto the right side, and the even unto the left; and to by parity or imparity or levers in men's names, to determine misfortunes. Brown.

2. More than a round number; indefinitely exceeding any number specified.

The account of the profits of Ulster, from the fifth year of Edward III. until the eighth, do amount

Such a deprecating of thing on thing.

As ever I heard of such a one. Shakespeare.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,

I make up my delight,

No odd becoming graces.

Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Suckling.

When I brake loose from writers who have employed them, and put in propagating of vice,
I did not quit them but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his little muzzicholas found;
Their mouth still covered with their hand;
Else, may be, some odd talking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears

Attend the mutick of the tipicks. Prior.

The colour being made by nothing else than by reflection of a specular superficies, seems so odd a phenomenon, and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it decried to be taken notice of. Newton.

So proud I am to have,
So impudent I own myself no knave,
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grieve. Pope.

To countenance this hero of the mole,
Some for reason are irregular and odd,
What other men dislike is sure to please
Of all mankind these dear antipodes. Young.

4. Not noted; not taken into the common account; unheeded.

I left him cooling of the sun with figs,
In an odd angle of the stile. Shakespeare.

One man is pressed with poverty, and looks somewhat oddly upon it. Collier.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of waking men's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are mistaken in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped tetra, whether it were a man or no? and should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As in others in the close obscurer.

With various light your eyes allure:

A flaming yellow have the Aprad;

Draw off in blue, or change in red;

Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,

Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black fulfaint lying on the ground very oddly shaped. Swift.

Fish are very oddly and elegantly shaped, ac-

We bear our civil swords and native fire.

As far as France. Shakespeare.

I chancy who enjoy

So far the happier lot, enjoying thee

Permeant by so much odds. Milton.

Shall I give him a partake

Full hapless is with me, for with me not;

But keep the odds of knowledge in my power.

Without a partake. Milton.

Circumstances with odds of number and of fate,

Remind me of the odds of the church and state. Walker.

All these, thus unequally furnished with truth, and advanced in knowledge, I suppose of equal advantages, all the odds between them have been the different scope that has been given to their imagination and reason. Locke.

Justice is balancing a count, and determining on which side the odds be. Locke.

2. More than an even wager; more likely than the contrary.

Some very moody nature is very prone to think the best of himself, and of his own condition; it is odd, but he will find a third advantage. South.

The probability of parties endeavouring one day to introduce a debate about repeating the test clause, when there appeared at least four to one odds against them. South.

Some list up bellows upon them some inconfu-table benches; when the odds there are already encountered with a numerous innuendo. South.

3. Advantage; superiority.

And tho' the sword, some understood,
In force had much the odds of wood,

Were still at odds, living but three;
Until the goose came out of door,
And said the odds by adding four. Shakespeare.

Gods of whatsoe'er degree,
Refuse not what themselves have given,
Or any brother God in heav'n.

Which keeps the peace among the gods,
Or they must always be at odds. Swift.

ONE. n. s. [ὄνη.] A poem written to be sung to music; a lyric poem.

The ode is either of the greater or less kind.
The less is characterized by sweetness and ease; the greater by sublimity, rapture; and quickness of transition.

A man haunts the forest that abuses our young plants
With carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs ods upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles, all forthwith despoiling the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare.

O run, prevent them with thy humble ode,
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet.

What work among you scholar gods!
Phoebus must write his am'rous odes;

And thou, poor cousin, must compose
His letters in subsilive prose. Prior.

little wine into them; he kept himself alive with the odour till a certain feast was past. Bacon.

Infusions in air, for so we may call odours, have the same diversities with infusions in water; in that the several odours which are in one flower or other body, issue at several times, some earlier, some later. Bacon.

They refer savor unto salt, and odours unto sulphur; they vary much concerning colour. Bacon.

Where silver riv'lets play, thro' flow'ry meads,
And woodbines give their sweets, and limes their shades,
Black kennels absent odours the regrets,
And stops her nose at beds of violets. Young.

2. Fragrance; perfume; sweet scent.

Me seem'd I smelt a garden of sweet flowers,
That dainty odours from them threw around,
For damfels fit to deck their lovers' bow'rs. Spenser.

By her intercession with the king she would lay a most seasonable and popular obligation upon the whole nation, and leave a pleasant odour of her grace and favour to the people behind her. Clarendon.
